FINE DETECTIVE WORK.

This County Can Do some Things Same as Chicago.

The COURIER has already given notes about Milan Albright being arrested for cutting down Andy Boyd's apple trees. There is quite a tale connected therewith. It will be remembered that at the spring term of court we reported a case in which Albright was fined for killing Boyd's dog. It cost him with all its frills over $31 This appeared to sour Albright, and when thirty-two of Boyd's young fruit trees were destroyed recently suspicion at once pointed to Albright, but there was no proof and he was not arrested. About two weeks ago, however, a peddler was selling tea and coffee by sample in Albright's neighborhood and got acquainted about there He sold Boyd some of his goods and when he came to deliver it the tea was found not to be equal to the sample and some hot words followed, They came to blows, and the result was that Boyd swore out a warrant against the peddler, had him arrested and fined $1 and costs for as-ault Among the witnessed for the peddler was Albright, who it appears still held his grudge against Boyd So he invited the peddler home to stay all night with him This he did on Monday evening of this week. It is understood that the two men put their heads together as to how to get revenge on Boyd. The result was a decision to cut down some more of Boyd's fruit trees that night, a matter which was reported in Tuesday's Daily. Tuesday morning Boyd came up, swore out a warrant in 'Squire Walter's court and had Albright arrested, as already told.

And now comes the interesting part of the story It is pretty certain that the peddler was a private detective and that the fight between him and Boyd was a fake and a part of a plan to get into Albright's confidence. We shall not disclose the entire plot laid by Albright and the peddler during their consultation that night, but it will all be made public when court meets; and then, as usual, the COURIER will report it all. We are not informed as to what punishment can be given for such an offense as destroying fruit trees, but believe the offender may be made to pay a fine of five times the value of the trees destroyed, and also a good jail sentence. But the whole affair is interesting as showing the amount of detective talent this county can furnish when needed.

Big Fire at Reading.

Word came this morning that a large portion of the business part of Reading, Mich., was burned last night. Ten stores and three dwellings were destroyed, but at last accounts it was under control. The fire originated in a livery barn, probably from a lantern.

Later. The entire block was burned except the bank building at the South East corner and the hotel on the north east corner. The business buildings destroyed were: Campbell's boot and shoe store, Brown's jewelry store, Shiley's drug store, Hill's grocery, Crane's clothing store, Cook & Co's hardware store, Bigelow's millinery store, Orr & Doty's drygoods store. Also a harness shop, and the barn back of the hotel where the fire started at about midnight. The residences burned, were those of Sylvester Henry, a former Auburn man; Robert Dement and Fon Shaffer. The insurance is not reported.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters;' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50cts., guaranteed, at H B. McCord's Drugstore.

August Flower.

"It is a surprising fact," says Prof. Houton, "that in my travels in all parts of the world, for the last ten years, I have met more people having used Green's August Flower than any other remedy, for dyspepsia, deranged liver and stomach, and for constipation. I find for tourists and salesmen, or for persons filling office positions, where headaches and general bad feelings from irregular habits exist, that Green's August Flower is a grand remedy. It does not injure the system by frequent use, and is excellent for sour stomachs and indigestion" Sample bottles free at O. P. Raber's, Corunna. Sold by dealers in all civilized countries. 1

CHAPTER V.

So many of the Colony have been absent at the various watering places and other resorts that the attendance has been a little uncertain.

Just now when the roads have been dusty they have discussed the matter of having a sidewalk and a row of shade trees to the Junction. It would be a good thing and though it would cost the lot owners a good sized sum, it would help to sell their lots and in a short time we would have a row of comfortable homes along there instead of weeds.

Speaking of Junction affairs, it was learned that not long ago, the three railroad companies took a notion they would like to make a nice little park in the triangular ground between the three tracks. This is the most sensible idea that ever originated at the Junction, at least with the railroads there. So they at once, set about doing what should have been done long years ago. It would be a great relief to passengers who have to stay there for hours to have a pleasant place to lounge in. But on feeling round to secure the land, they found Mr. Hollister either not willing to sell, or not willing to take such a price as they thought they could afford. So they reluctantly gave it up, and soon after that big fence was put up to ornament the waste grounds.

The Mathematician here found a pause, that let him bring in his funny story. This one was on Theo. Kessler. Theo. is the best natured man in Auburn, and his good nature often leads him to overlook points. He was studying over the matter of the partership between his brother Will and the two Hebel brothers, John and Mike, who form the well known Standard Manufacturing Company. He was explaining how Will had the power to outvote the rest of the stockholders, and his reasoning was like this. "Now, Will has two shares, John has one share and Mike one share. In case of a disagreement, Will could carry his point, for two shares will always outvote one share." But some of the boys asked. "Suppose John and Mike should vote together, where would Will be?" Theo. scratched his head a minute and broke out into one of his favorite, hearty laughs. "By George, boys, I never thought of that." And he is now studying over the point that "one times two is not much better than two times one."

CLEAN PEOPLE

Cleanliness goes with health. If we have catarrh anywhere we cannot be wholly clean.

Makesystematic efforts to be free from this disgusting disease. Mrs. L. A. Johnston, 103 Pilham and Ripley Sts., Montgomery, Ala., tells her experience with catarrh of the stomach and how she was cured:

"I will state to you that I have taken eight bottles of your Pe-ru-na and two of Man-a-lin and rejoice to say, 'God bless Dr. Hartman and Pe-ru-na.' And I earnestly assure you that it has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken in my life. I prescribe it to every one I meet who is suffering, as the best medicine in the world, and have made many converts who are now rejoicing in the great good which they have derived from the same. I can tell you that I am almost entirely relieved of indigestion, that great foe which has tortured me so many years, and can now eat anything I desire without it is fruits or something acid."

To understand the scientific action of Pe-ru-na it is best to have Dr. Hartman's special book for women or his book on chronic catarrh. These books are mailed free by the Pe-ru-na Medicine Company, Columbus, O. All druggists sell Pe-ru-na.

SULU TREATY IN FULL.

United States Sovereignty Fully Recognized by the Sultan.

We here give the full conditions of this important treaty. The people of the Sulu Islands, and some parts of the larger islands, are known as the Moros.

THE TREATY.

1. The sovereignty of the United States over the entire Sulu archipelago is acknowledged.

2. The American flag is adopted as the flag of the sultan.

3 The United States government may occupy and control such points in the archipelago as the public interests demand, except territory immediately surrounding the sultan's grounds, unless such occupation shall be a military necessity due to the exigencies of war with a foreign power.

ANY ONE MAY PURCHASE LAND

4. In case due compensation be made any person shall be permitted to purchase land in the archipelago by obtaining the consent of the sultan. Such purchase may be registered at the proper American offices established for that purpose.

5. The rights and dignities of the sultan and datos (chiefs) are to be fully respected.

ALL RELIGIOUS CUSTOMS RESPECTED.

6. The Moros are not to be interfered with on account of their religion. All religious customs are to be respected, and no one is to be persecuted on account of his religion.

7. All trade in domestic products of the archipelago when carried on by the sultan or the Moro people under the flag of the United States is to be free, unlimited and undutiable.

8. The sultan is allowed to communicate direct with the governor-general of the Philippines in making complaint against the commanding officers representing American authority at Jolo, the principal town, or against any naval commander.

INTRODUCTION OF FIREARMS PROHIBITED.

9. The introduction of firearms into the archipelgo is forbidden except on permission of the governor-general.

10. The sultan agrees to suppress piracy.

11. The sultan will try all cases arising of Moros against Moros, the convicted men being delivered to the Americans for punishment.

SLAVES MAY PURCHASE FREEDOM.

12. Any slave in the archipelago is given the right to purchase his freedom by paying his owner the sum of $20.

13. Whenever trouble arises between Americans and the sultan the former must fully investigate the matter before resorting to harsh measures.

15. The United States will protect the sultan in the event of any foreign nation attempting any imposition on him.

16. The United States must not sell the archipelago to any foreign nation without the consent of the sultan.

SALARIES TO BE PAID.

17. For governirg his subjects and preserving peace the sultan is to receive a monthly salary of $250 (Mexican.) The three chief datos will receive $75 (Mexican) monthly. Three other datos will receive $60 (Mexican) monthly. The sultan's secretary will receive a monthly salary of $50 (Mexican.) Raja Mura will receive $40 (Mexican) and and Serif Saguin $15 (Mexican) monthly.

THE SIGNERS OF THE TREATY.

The treaty was signed at the sultan's capital, Maibum, on Aug. 20. Besides receiving the signature of the sultan it was signed for the Moros by Raja Mura and Datos Attik, Kalbi and Joakanin, the most powerful of the chiefs. Gen. Bates signed for the Americans.

The sultan requested permission to build residences for himself in the towns of Jolo and Saissi, which permission was granted.

For Naval Apprentices.

Harry Williams and Will Douglas have been investigating for some time as to the naval service of Uncle Sam. The result is a letter from Lieut. B W. Wells of the navy to John Zimmerman in regard to taking the boys. Lieut. Wells has orders to take at St. Louis, thirty boys for naval apprentices and advises them if they wish to enter the service, to come at once. They were to go before Dr. Nusbaum today for examination, but have not done so as yet. The letter advises that the examination be made carefully so they will not be rejected at St. Louis, in which case they would have to pay their own expenses home. They should start tomorrow, Aug. 25, as that is the day set to begin recruiting and first come, if suitable, will be taken. The apprenticeship lasts four years, or about the time the boys are of age. We hope to see the lads succeed.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

As an honest remedy, Foley's Honey and Tar does not hold out false hopes in advanced stages, but truthfully claims to give comfort and relief in the very worst cases, and in the early stages to effect a cure.

Terrible Boiler Explosion.

The large boiler used in furnishing steam and power for the stone crushers at Yoder & Son's stone quarry, near Linn Grove, Ind., exploded with terrific force. Alfred Minger, the fireman, was terribly scalded, his entire body being completely cooked. He will die. Daniel Yoder, the senior member of the firm, was also seriously injured, and it is thought he cannot recover. Eight other men employed in the quarry were more or less injured, but none seriously. The boiler and engine were blown twenty feet from their foundation, and the report was heard for miles around.

Pilot Boat Looted by Chinese Pirates.

A dispatch from Victoria, B. C., says: The steamer Kinshua Maru brings news from China of the looting of the British pilot boat at the mouth of the Yangtse Kiang by Chinese pirates. Capt. Roberts, of the pilot boat, was fatally injured. The British authorities have demanded an indemnity and punishment of the malfactors.

At the town of Echigo, Japan, 400 houses were burned early in August and 120 inhabitants perished.

Pennsylvania Republicans.

The Pennsylvania Republican State Convention met at Harrisburg. The platform adopted endorsed Quay and commended Gov. Stone for appointing him Senator to fill the vacancy caused by the deadlock. It also endorsed McKinley in his Philippine policy and the gold standard. The nominations are: J. Hay Brown, for Supreme Judge; J. R. Adams, for Superior Judge; Lieut. Col. Barnett, State Treasurer.

Attorney General Davis of Arkansas Says Affidavit Is Illegal.

Attorney General Jeff Davis at Little Rock, Ark., has given out a statement to the press in which he says he will advise all corporations who refer the matter to him not to furnish to the Secretary of State the affidavit required of them by the Rector anti-trust law. He says that if they decline to furnish the affidavit there is no law to punish them that can be enforced. He bases his opinion upon this fact: The affidavit is a verbatim copy of the affidavit prescribed by the Legislature in a similar anti-trust law of the State of Missouri. The question was carried up to the Supreme Court in that State, which body declared that the affidavit was unconstitutional, holding that the requiring of a corporation to file an affidavit of that character is virtually compelling a man to testify against himself, which he is exempted from doing by the organic law of the State.

HISSES FOR JOUAUST.

PRESIDENT OF COURT-MARTIAL FEELS PUBLIC SCORN.

Shows Pronounced Bias—Audience Resents His Position in True Gallic Fashion—Witnesses Against Captive—Some Are Confused by Demange.

The third week of the second trial by court-martial of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus began without incident at Rennes Monday morning. There was a large attendance in the lycee at the opening of court, in view of the possible reappearance of Maitre Labori, leading counsel for the defense. But his physicians deemed it best for him to remain quiet. When it became known that the distinguished lawyer would not participate in the proceedings a large number of disappointed persons quitted the court-room, leaving perceptible gaps along the benches.

DREYFUS SALUTES THE COURT.
(From the London Daily Graphic.)

The accused entered the courtyard looking pale and careworn. He stoops more than formerly and never smiles. There is a settled look of gloom on Dreyfus' face as though he realized the immensity of the forces arrayed against him.

Gen. Fabre of the general staff was the first to testify. He related how he compared a captured letter conveying treasonable documents to the handwriting of Dreyfus, and what a remarkable resemblance there was between them. The witness said that besides the general conduct of the accused was suspicious. M. Demange asked Gen. Fabre why he was so positive about these things, when at the court-marital in 1894 he claimed to have had no personal knowledge of Dreyfus. Fabre's previous evidence to this effect was then read. As the wide discrepancy between that and his present testimony became evident, the witness grew red and stammered an explanation.

THE SPOT AT RENNES WHERE LABORI WAS SHOT.
The cross marks the place where he fell.

Col. Aboville then testified to the same effect as Gen. Fabre, telling of the identification of the prisoner's handwriting with that of treasonable papers. He was sure Dreyfus had written them. M. Cochefert, the detective who arrested Dreyfus, next testified. He told of the test made by de Clam, who dictated part of the bordereau to Dreyfus. He said the accused exhibited great emotion, as he had also when placed under arrest.

Next came Gribelin, recorder of the general staff. He argued that Dreyfus was guilty, and that Col. Picquart's evidence was manufactured. Capt. Dreyfus then arose, and, speaking calmly, proceeded to refute the testimony of Cochefort and Gribelin. He related the scene of the dictation test. "I remember it perfectly," said Dreyfus. "I came in from a cold room, where I had been waiting. The difference between my writing then and my usual handwriting was alone due to my cold fingers."

Commandant Lauth, formerly of the general staff, a bitter enemy of Picquart, next took the stand. Lauth related evidence similar to the others who testified before him, and then told a long story of how Col. Picquart had sent him to see a German spy in Switzerland who was supposedly anxious to enter the French secret service. The witness was a decoy mission, and Picquart was seeking to entrap him. A long discussion followed this relation as if Picquart was the real accused. Under cross-examination Lauth denied that the petit bleu had been altered or was in two handwritings.

Col. Picquart created a sensation by announcing that in view of the insinuations against him, he would demand a court of inquiry examine his use of the secret funds while chief of the intelligence bureau.

Capt. Junck, an intimate friend of Col. Henry, was called to the stand. He said Dreyfus was allowed to see papers from all the bureaus because he was preparing a paper on the difference between the French and German artillery. In this way, he said, the accused obtained the knowledge which he treasonably communicated. Junck showed an intimate knowledge of the whole Dreyfus affair.

The session wound up with a scene on account of the extraordinary conduct of Col. Jouaust, president of the court, who permitted himself to make an unwarrantable display of partiality. M. Bertulus had been confronted with the last witness, Capt. Junck, and Gen. Gonse had defended the latter when Col. Picquart rose and asked to be allowed to refute some of Junck's remarks. Col. Jouaust made a gesture of impatience and shouted:

"What, again?"

An outburst of booing and hissing came from the audience at such a display of unfairness from the president. Judges and gendarmes quickly suppressed the noise, but Col. Jouaust understood the well-merited rebuke administered him, turned red and adjourned the court ten minutes later.

COLONEL PICQUART.
Dreyfus' Stanch Friend at Trial of the French Officer.

pected in the Dreyfus trial, says a correspondent. A thousand witnesses like Mercier, Roget, Cuiquet and Fabre would not convince those who believe Dreyfus the victim of a conspiracy that he is guilty. The anti-Semitic element is too blindly prejudiced against the prisoner to care anything about the evidence.

JOHN BROWN'S RAIDERS.

Seven More Victims to Sleep Near Their Old Leader's Grave.

The bodies of seven of John Brown's raiders who fell at Harper's Ferry have recently been exhumed and sent to North Elba, N. Y., where they will be buried

Of the other three raiders who were killed at Harper's Ferry, the remains of one, Watson Brown, were recovered and buried near John Brown's body in 1882. Where the other two are no one can tell. They were taken from Harper's Ferry after the fight and were used in a medical college for anatomical purposes. Watson Brown's body was taken away for the same purpose, but it was traced and recovered by Mrs. Brown many years afterward. The two whose whereabouts are unknown are Jeremiah G. Anderson and Lewis S. Leary, the latter a negro. Ceremonies were held at John Brown's grave when the seven bodies arrived and Rev. Joshua Young, who buried John Brown and who suffered social ostracism for it, took part. He is now living in Groton, Mass.

A monument is to be erected over the graves at North Elba. The bodies recovered are those of Oliver Brown, Stewart Taylor, W. H. Leeman, William Thompson, Dauphin O. Thompson, John H. Kagi and Dangerfield Newby. A fragment of the bearskin overcoat in which, according to tradition, Oliver Brown was buried, was found in one of the graves, and two lead pencils dropped from it when it was taken up.

THE KUKLUX KLAN.

The Original White-Caps Are Soon to Hold a Reunion.

Some time soon the famous Kuklux Klan will hold a reunion in Atlanta, Ga. Only the members of the organization know the exact date of the meeting.

The Kuklux Klan was the most formidable organization ever formed in this country for the purpose of punishing crime outside the courts. When first organized the object was to protect life and property among the law-abiding class from the ruthless depredations of the outlaws who infested the country. Such was the chaotic condition of affairs in the South following the close of the civil war that nobody felt secure, so the originators of the klan determined to administer swift and speedy justice to such criminals as deserved punishment, and the penalty was graduated according to the character of the crime.

While at the beginning it undoubtedly exercised a salutary influence in quelling the lawless element, and in the protection of life and property, still by degrees unscrupulous men took advantage of the terrible and mysterious reputation of the Kuklux Klan to avenge themselves upon those for whom they had conceived an enmity, and it finally degenerated into a gang of desperadoes that were worse than the element which it sought to punish.

It was no infrequent occurrence during the latter days of the klan for some peaceful citizen to be taken from his home and maltreated by a gang of ruffians led by some member who had decided that it would be for his personal gain that the citizen should be made to leave the community. Many were the dark deeds of violence done under cover of the night and under the cloak of the Kiklux Klan long after the more respectable class that originally belonged to it had withdrawn in disgust and had joined in the effort to atone for past errors by assisting in putting down the klan and bringing the perpetrators of such deeds to justice.

MERCIER A FORGER.

Austrian Military Attache Will Prosecute the Frenchman.

Chief among the topics of conversation in Paris is the reported action of Col. Schneider, Austrian military attache, who is to prosecute General Mercier for forgery. The case will come before the Paris Court of Assizes. This is the hardest blow yet delivered the military cabal. The anti-Dreyfus journals have been boasting that Schneider falsified. They said he was a tool of the triple alliance. This boast is now an empty one, and their own reputation for veracity is among missing quantities. Mercier's offense consists in having adduced a document in the Rennes court purporting to be a report on Dreyfus from Schneider to his government. Throughout France the conservative press severely condemns the action of Mercier in trying to drag foreign powers into the Dreyfus affair. It is regarded as particularly unfortunate that he should do this right after Emperor William's eulogies of French soldiers at the inauguration of the St. Privat monument.

There is nothing at all new or unex-

BOER WAR IMMINENT.

BRITISH OFFICIALS BELIEVE A CONFLICT AT HAND.

Kruger's Answer Taken as a Defiance of England—Counter Proposal from Transvaal Will Be Ignored—Backdown of Afrikanders Only Way Out.

The action of President Kruger of the Transvaal in refusing to accept the court of inquiry proposed by Secretary Chamberlain has caused officials of the Colonial Department to believe that war with the Boers is now inevitable.

London advices say that just what Oom Paul's reply to Mr. Chamberlain contained in the way of rejecting his plan for settling the dispute is not known, as the colonial office is noncommittal, but it has been admitted, however, that in place of accepting the suggested court of inquiry, Kruger submitted a number of new proposals, that are taken to mean an open defiance to England.

The British officials, however, would far rather have received a curt, defiant reply from the Boers than the temporizing and "soft word" answer, which it is feared will require considerable explanation to justify any aggressive action in the eyes of the world and English minority, which still declares that war would be an outrage.

It has developed that the war office has been aware of the nature of the Transvaal's reply for several days, hence it is believed that Great Britain will delay the denoument as little as possible, and if Mr. Chamberlain has his way the counter proposals of President Kruger will meet with scant attention, thus forcing the Boers into a position where the only way to avoid war will be by a complete back-down, which is not at all probable.

All England is talking war. Even the man in the street who knows nothing of what is going on behind the scenes is confident that an appeal to arms is now the only solution left for the Transvaal problem, which has reached an ugly stage. That the Boers will yield all is not believed, and this idea is strengthened by the feverish preparations which both sides have been making for hostilities within the last month.

Throughout the Orange Free State and Cape Colony Sunday was observed with prayer and humiliation by the populace advocating a peaceful settlement of the Transvaal dispute. A dispatch from Pretoria says: "President Kruger, while personally conducting a public church service, prayed that if war was unavoidable God might find right and truth on the side of the Afrikanders."

CITY RUINED BY FIRE.

Flames Destroy the Business Portion of Victor, Col.

Fire has destroyed the business portion of the city of Victor, Colo., causing a loss estimated at $2,500,000. Beginning shortly after noon Monday the fire raged until evening, consuming everything in its way. It had its origin, it is thought, in the Merchants' cafe, adjoining the Bank of Victor, 3d street and Victor avenue. A strong wind from the south fanned the flames, and in a few minutes all the surrounding houses were afire.

Help was summoned from Cripple Creek, but the town had been built in the early days of the camp, and was of pine timber, for the most part, and burned like paper. Efforts were made to stop the progress of the flames by blowing up buildings in their path, and all afternoon the hills have roared with the explosions, but the effort was in vain.

The fire claimed the Bank of Victor, the postoffice, on the corner opposite, crossed 3d street and followed the row of blocks between 3d and 4th streets to the north, taking the Victor Banking Company, the Western Union Telegraph Company's office, the office of the Colorado Telephone Company, the Hotel Victor, on the opposite side of 4th street, and the three great shaft houses of the Gold Coin Mining Company, and its ore bins, among the largest in the Cripple Creek district.

The scenes of the great Cripple Creek fire were duplicated. Hurrying before the roaring flames went men, women and children, carrying what they could snatch from the fire, racing for their lives. The crash of buildings torn asunder by dynamite and the crackle of the flames as they consumed the dry timbers hastened their flight, and the pall of smoke added a terror to the spectacle. The residence portion of the city has suffered little, but the business part is paralyzed, and suffering is bound to follow.

DEMOCRATS TO ACT EARLY.

May Hold National Convention in February or March, 1900.

The next Democratic convention may be held as early as February and not later than March, 1900. A Chicago dispatch says that sentiment among party leaders has been crystallizing in favor of an early convention, and it may find expression at a meeting of the national committee, which will be held in Washington very soon after Congress convenes in December. Ex-Governor Stone of Missouri, as acting chairman of the committee and probable manager of the campaign of 1900, is the originator of the plan for holding the convention in February or March.

The underlying motive for holding an early convention is to enable the men who will have to shoulder the responsibility of conducting next year's battle, to raise money. By holding the conclave in February or March, nominating Mr. Bryan for President, selecting a running mate for him and adopting a platform, ex-Governor Stone is convinced that the intervening time until September, when the actual campaign will be begun, can be profitably employed raising a fund big enough to enable the national committee to make a handsome showing. Mr. Bryan, it is understood, favors the plan. Mr. Bryan is regarded as the nominee now. The choice of his running mate will be largely a matter of expediency.

GREET LABORI WITH CHEERS.

Distinguished Counsel for Dreyfus Resumes His Place in Court.

Maitre Labori was present at the Dreyfus court-martial Tuesday morning. He drove to the court in a carriage and entered the hall at 6:30 o'clock. The audience greeted him by standing up and by a general clapping of hands. Maitre Labori walked briskly, but holding his left arm close to his side in order not to disturb his wound. He met General Mercier and General Billot in the middle of the courtroom, stopped, chatted, and smiled.

Labori looked quite well. He was given a cushioned armchair. Captain Dreyfus on entering smilingly shook hands with Labori. Colonel Jouaust addressed a few words of congratulation to Labori and expressed the profound indignation of the tribunal at the attempt to assassinate the counsel. Labori was much moved and thanked Colonel Jouaust in an eloquent speech.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Life Convict May Be Freed—Young Husband Poisoned—South Bend Man Nearly Starves in a Hotel—Harvest Hands Are Badly Wanted.

Union B. Hunt, Secretary of State, and James E. Parker of Evansville held a conference with Convict Hinshaw, the Belleville clergyman serving a life sentence in the prison north for the alleged murder of his wife. Parker and Hunt are Hinshaw's attorneys and their conference was brought about by the revival of the convict story of Baney and others to the effect that Hinshaw is innocent and a couple of convicts are guilty. The attorneys for Hinshaw attach great importance to the so-called confession, which they have reduced to writing, and they will make another effort in Hinshaw's behalf.

Harvesters in Great Demand.

Agents from the broom corn district of Illinois have been in Terre Haute to employ farmers to work for a month harvesting the crop and are bidding against one another for labor. One agent rounded up twenty-two young farmers in Terre Haute at $1.25 a day and board, when another agent offered $1.50. The first agent raised his offer to $1.75, with a contract for a month's work and took the men with him.

Find Arsenic in Stomach.

At Peru, William Quick died under circumstances that puzzled the physicians. Coroner Yarling held a post-mortem examination. Nothing definite was revealed and the stomach was sent to the secretary of the State Board of Health, Dr. J. N. Hurty, at Indianapolis, who found quantities of arsenic. Quick was 21 years of age and had been married just a month.

SONGS THAT TOUCH.

Not from the grand old masters,
Not from the bards sublime,
Whose distant footsteps echo
Down the corridors of time.

Read from some humbler poet,
Whose songs gushed from his heart
As showers from the clouds of summer,
Or tears from the eyelids start.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.

HAPPY EVER AFTER

UNTIL we met face to face in a crowded street I had not known of Ben being in London.

His manner seemed a little nervous, but I attributed it to our unexpected meeting.

We had been friends until our walks in life widened apart. He became an architect and decorator and I had chosen medicine.

When the cab stopped before a handsome house and Ben sprang out, I was silent with amazement. He led me through halls and rooms that seemed old and grand to my American eyes, and then closed the door of a cozy den and we were alone.

"Why, Ben, old fellow, you must have struck it rich," I ventured, and he looked at me, paling a little.

"Haven't you heard?" he asked.

"Not a word since the old man was cut up in the wreck, and Dan Ward, being the next of kin, came in for the fortune that should have been yours," I replied, hesitatingly, knowing what a blow all this had been to Ben.

He laughed softly, and his hands moved in the old, restless way I had so often noticed when he had something important to tell me.

"You came away before I took the contract to restore the old place?" he said.

"Yes," I answered, with something like a gasp. Had they added insult to injury? Had they dared——

"At first the offer hurt me, and then the man in me gave way to what you used to call the artistic instinct. Hadn't I been thinking of its possibilities all these years?"

"But to do it for another man—for him, Ben!" I interrupted.

"Well, he really couldn't help it, you know, though it was not until later that I was able to take that philosophical view of it. It was only that I loved Lakewood too well to have it spoiled, and—and I wanted to get away from the city, for Dolly's father—well, he liked Lakewood and all that goes with it, and so Dan, and not I, was in high favor with him."

"It was hard when you had every reason to expect it for your own," I persisted.

"Yes, but there was the bigger trouble using me up," he said, smiling softly.

He sat still then; still, except those restless hands; slender and white as a woman's they were, and I knew by their moving that Ben's story was a hard one for him to tell.

"You don't believe in ghosts—in the return of the disembodied spirit, do you, Dick?"

"Well, no, Ben. I suppose I am material. My profession——"

"But you'll believe my story." He looked up with his sweet, calm smile.

"Certainly I will. Am I to hear it now?"

He glanced at the clock. "Yes. I'll tell you now, before Dolly comes——"

"Dolly!"

"You have the last of the story first. The 'married and happy ever after,' you know. Well, you see, we went down to Lakewood, and the men lived at the village hotel. But I put up at the old place, with Gaston and Hannah to take care of me. Poor old things! Over and over they described the horrible scene to me. I had only reached home in time for the funeral, you know, and for the—the will, which could not be found.

"For a year, a whole year, I worked, never once growing tired of the exquisite woods, metals and fabrics. A year, and the anniversary of my adopted father's death was at hand. Ah! the place was a wonder of beauty now!

"It happened that I was at work in the old man's room, the long one along the south wing. It was midnight, and I was busy with my drawings. Now and then a splash of rain came with the wind through the window, and the light, the only one in the room, flickered and cast strange shadows on my papers.

"I had measured the wall and was turning away when something on the pillow caught my eye, and I stood still. My blood froze as the horror of it came upon me, and my feet were like lead.

"On the pillow lay the head of Mr. Guthrie. The fine, grim old face, with its inscrutable eyes and thin lips, the brow and shining white hair—all this, but the head only—the head severed from a body that I did not see.

"I heard a voice, a low, sobbing voice, but my soul was faint with sickening fear, and I did not hear the words. I staggered to a chair, my fascinated eyes on the face that lay upon the white pillow. But only my eyes were alive. I could not hear if there were words. The light on the table flickered and went out and I was alone with that.

"Hannah came with the coffee I always have at midnight when I am at work. She relighted my lamp and moved it out of the draft. I glanced at the bed. There was nothing on the pillow. Hannah looked sharply at me and went away. I swallowed the black coffee, and went over to the table where my work lay.

"Presently, as I sat listening, I heard a slow, halting step. I knew the sound. A hesitating, heavy step—the step of an old man whose feet are tired of earth's ways. I turned my head, and I saw crossing the room the lower limbs of a man—the feet and legs to the knees. They were going from me.

"Near the wall, at the side of the bed they stopped. A flash of lightning dazzled me, and when I looked again they were gone, but turned toward me were a pair of arms, long, shaking arms and slender yellow hands, floating slowly across me. I felt them on my face, the cold, clammy fingers, the icy palms. I felt them draw me from my seat and on to the wall at the side of the bed.

"And then I saw them move doubtfully, carefully over the dark panels with the hesitating, uncertain motion that belongs to old people when sensation has grown dull.

"I was dumb with horror, but I stood there quaking like a dying thing, and I felt my own hands lifted and saw them move over the panels, guided by those other hands. And a panel moved, and I heard a rustle as of old papers, and a thud, and then I sank down and down to——

"For days I was dead to things of earth. But at last I began to be able to trace Dolly's face in the darkness that enveloped me, and her voice was the first I heard. It was she who held my hands one day when I was better, and told me that in my work I had somehow found the will and old papers that proved—that proved the secret I had always suspected. I told you long ago." He left off; a sort of breathless look came to his face.

"I know. You are Mr. Guthrie's son," I said quietly.

"Yes. But they can't find the place where the papers were hidden. It is strange, Dick. I have had the walls searched again and again. The old room has been ruined in the search. I cannot go back, and so we are here, Dolly and I, and Lakewood waits for us. Ah, she is coming!"

"Ben, are you hiding from me here in the firelight?" And Dolly, laughing, light-hearted Dolly, fluttered in.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A NOTED NOVELIST.

Mrs. Southworth Had a Long and Popular Literary Career.

Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, who died at her home in Georgetown, D. C., recently, was one of the most popular novelists of her time and one of the most prolific. She was born in 1819 and during her 80 years of life had given to the world 75 novels—one almost for every year of her existence. Her first novel, "Retaliation," brought her fame and subsequent efforts securely confirmed it.

MRS. SOUTHWORTH.

In 1841 Miss Nevitte—this was her maiden name, married Frederick H. Southworth, in Utica, N. Y. Two years later she was thrown on her own resources by his desertion, "broken in spirit, health and purse—a widow in fate, but not in fact—with my babes looking up to me for a support I could not give them," as she forcibly relates. This was suffering added to suffering, for in early years her sight was affected and her childhood was exceptionally unhappy. Her father died when she was about 4 years old, and, under the care of her mother and grandmother, she passed her girlhood in solitude and misery.

Necessity spurred her to action and she became a teacher. Then she turned to literature and produced "Retaliation."

This was the turning point in her career. Other works were written, and within five years she had achieved a competence. "The Deserted Wife," "Shannondale," "The Mother-in-Law," "Children of the Isle," "The Lost Heiress" and other volumes followed in quick succession.

She was enabled in 1853 to remove to a charming villa on the Potomac Heights, at the west end of Georgetown, which she called Prospect Cottage. There she lived for many years, her home becoming the resort of distinguished people from all parts of the country. For a few years in the '70s she lived in Yonkers, N. Y.

Mrs. Southworth was probably the oldest living novelist, and her "Retribution," which was published two years before "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is said to have been the first novel published serially in this country. Her stories were translated into French, German, Italian and Spanish, and it is not many years since public librarians said that no books so frequently required rebinding as hers did.

Besides the novels already mentioned, "Ishmael," "The Hidden Hand," "The Trail of the Serpent" and "The Fatal Secret" are among the more famous from her pen. "The Hidden Hand" proved a great success here and in England in dramatized form.

The Line of England's Rulers.

First William the Norman, then William his son,
Henry, Stephen, and Henry, then Richard and John,
Next Henry the Third, Edwards one, two and three,
And again after Richard three Henrys we see,
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess,
Two Henrys, sixth Edward, Queen Mary, Queen Bess;
Then Jamie the Scotsman, then Charles whom they slew,
But received after Cromwell another Charles, too.
Then James the second ascended the throne,
And good William and Mary together came on,
Till Anne, Georges four, and fourth William all past,
God sent England Victoria; may she long be the last!

Genius is a peculiar form of insanity that causes a man to toil incessantly without knowing whether he will get $.00 or $100 for his labor.

What labor needs to make it dignified is an eight-hour law applied to the mothers who work sixteen hours a day.

With all the gold we are sending abroad just now we are sending people who know how to distribute it.

TWO YOUNGSTERS WHO HAVE WON FAME.

The hero of the moment in England is a 14-year-old boy named A. E. F. Collins, of Clifton College, who recently made the record cricket score of 628 not out. He batted for seven hours. The next biggest score was that of A. E. Stoddart, who in 1886 scored 485. The biggest score the great Dr. W. G. Grace ever made was 400, in 1876. Another boy who is winning fame in England is little Johnny Reiff, the jockey. Reiff is also 14 years of age, yet he is earning $15,000 a year, and is now mentioned as a dangerous rival to Tod Sloan. Less than three years ago Reiff was a schoolboy in Cincinnati.

LION BITES NOT FELT.

ATTACK SEEMS TO DULL SENSE OF FEELING.

Attacks of Lesser Carnivora More Painful than Those of King of Beasts—Experiences Related by African Hunters Corroborate This View.

The attacks of the lesser carnivora, smaller in proportion to man, are frequently very painful; but matters are so ordered that the bite of a dog or a ferret is usually more painful than the injuries inflicted by the jaws of a lion. The instances quoted are very numerous and striking, and properly grouped according to locality or the species of the attacking beast. In Somaliland the experiences of the bitten are supplemented by Capt. Abud, the resident at Berbera, who has had a long experience of cases, English and native, as most of the former, unless killed outright, which very seldom happens, are brought to Berbera.

He states that "the view that no actual pain is suffered at the time seems almost universal. In most cases it would seem that there was no knowledge of the actual contact, even in the first rush of a lion, much less of any pain experienced from tooth wounds." This was the view not only of the English, but of natives. In one or two cases where consciousness was entirely lost the person "came to" while the lion was still standing over him, a period of complete anesthesia and unconsciousness having intervened. But more commonly those who have been attacked and have recovered are conscious all the time, and if they suffer at all do not feel acute pain. This may be accounted for partly by the shock given by the charge, which forms the usual preliminary to being wounded. A lion comes at his enemy at full speed, galloping low, and dashes a man standing upright to the ground by the full impact of its body. Major Inverarity states that "the claws and teeth entering the flesh do not hurt as much as you would think," but that the squeeze given by the jaws on the bone is really painful. When knocked over, he was still keenly conscious, and felt none of the dreamy sensation experienced by Livingstone.

Major Swaine, struck down by a lioness going full gallop, was unconscious for some minutes and did not know what had happened until he found himself standing up after the accident. "I felt no pain," he writes, "not, I believe, owing to any special interposition of Providence, but simply that the shock and loss of blood made me incapable of feeling it. There was no pain for a few days, till it was brought on by the swelling of my arm on the twelve days' ride to the coast." Capt. Noyes, attacked in the same district by a lion in 1895, was charged down and bitten, until the creature left him, probably when attacked by his servants. His hand was badly bitten, but he "was not conscious of any feeling of fear, or any pain whatever, probably because there was no time, but he felt exactly as if he had been bowled over in a football match, and nothing more." A far worse accident was that which befell Lieut. Vandezee in the same year, near Beira. The lion charged him down in the usual way and mangled his thighs and fractured one of his arms. "During the time the attack on me by the lion was in progress," he writes, "I felt no pain whatever, although there was a distinct feeling of being bitten—that is, I was perfectly conscious, independently of seeing the performance, that the lion was gnawing at me, but there was no pain.

"I may mention that while my thighs were being gnawed I took two cartridges out of the breast pocket of my shirt and threw them to the Kaffir, telling him to load my rifle, and immediately the lion died and rolled off on me. I scrambled up and took a loaded rifle and fired at the carcass."—London Spectator.

Paying for Poor Patients.

A unique charity, established by a rich woman of San Francisco, is described by the Chicago Inter Ocean.

A San Francisco doctor performed a successful operation for a rich woman, and when asked for his bill presented one for $50. The woman smiled and said, "Do you consider that a reasonable charge, considering my circumstances?" The doctor replied, "That is my charge for that operation; your circumstances have nothing to do with it." The lady drew a check for $500, and presented it to him. He handed it back, saying, "I connot accept this. My charge for the operation is $50." "Very well," the woman replied. "Keep the check, and put the balance to my credit."

Some months afterward she received a bill, upon which were entered charges of various kinds, rendered to all sorts of odds and ends of humanity, male and female, black and white, who had been mended at her expense. She was so delighted that she immediately placed another check for $500 to her credit on the same terms, and it is now being earned in the same way.

THE KISS.

How It Is Managed in Different Countries of the World.

Medical scientists tell us that we may no longer kiss; that it injures the health, and the evils resulting from the osculatory habit, if persisted in, are set forth ad libitum and ad nauseum. Man is the only animal that kisses as a mark of affection, and the kiss is undoubtedly as old as human nature. In the old catacomb pictures of Egypt fond lovers are depicted in kissing attitudes, while as far back as Jacob we are told that this worthy patriarch kissed Rachel and "lifted up his voice and wept," though why he wept is only a matter for conjecture. The Romans divided kisses into three classes—the osculum, basium and suavium, which meant the kiss of friendship, of politeness and of love. The Greeks recognized but one, the kiss of love. We of the present day have the kiss of reconciliation, of respect, of adoration, to say nothing of the Hobson kiss and the "Judas kiss." What will the scientists give us in lieu of the sweet, time-honored kiss? Perhaps, after awhile, we, like the New Zealanders, will rub noses as a mark of affection.

In France there are thousands of opportunities for plentiful kissing. Brothers kiss sisters, husbands wives, friends each other. It would even be thought prudish should a young lady refuse to offer her cheek for a kiss to a friend of the family on his departure or return after a long voyage.

In England kissing among members of a family is less common. Men never kiss one another. Still more restrained are they in Scotland, where a woman would consider it beneath her dignity if she kissed her grown-up sons, and mothers are sparing of caresses even for their little boys. In Northern lands the kiss is reserved exclusively for love.

The definition of a kiss by a Chinese is interesting. A mandarin who traveled in the West for the purpose of learning the European customs was greatly perplexed in trying to explain a kiss—a thing unknown in his country.

"The kiss," he writes, "is an act of courtesy, consisting in bringing the lips of one person into contact with the chin of another, whereby a sound is produced."

THE KISS—BY MAX LUBIEDZKI.

Kissing, however, is not a privilege reserved exclusively to love; there are occasions when it is prescribed by court etiquette. On the occasion of the crown prince of Greece's wedding the bride, Princess Sophia of Prussia, the Kaiser's sister, was obliged to bestow no less than 150 kisses.

The King of Greece received three kisses; so did his Queen; so did the Empress Frederick and the King and Queen of Denmark and Kaiser Wilhelm and the Empress, while all the princes and princesses present received one kiss apiece. The poor crown princess on leaving the church must have had all the kissing she wanted and probably had but few left for the wedding journey.

A recent experiment made at Berlin, where a young German undertook to press his lips to those of his sweetheart 1,000 times an hour, for ten consecutive hours, with short intervals for rest, is evidence that there is a limit to osculatory achievements and that kissing cannot be carried on as a continuous performance. Having kissed his sweetheart 3,750 times in two hours forty-eight minutes and ten seconds, this young German's lips were paralyzed and he swooned.

Costly Admiration.

A characteristic story of Gen. Lafayette was told in a Paris journal some years ago.

At Lamarque's funeral the crowd took out Gen. Lafayette's horses, as the famous soldier was returning home from the service, and drew his carriage to his hotel with many evidences of enthusiastic love and admiration. The scene was a stirring one, and a friend, in referring to it some weeks afterward, said, "You must have been very much pleased."

Lafayette looked at him for a moment in silence, and then, said, with a whimsical smile:

"Yes, I was very much pleased, very much pleased, indeed. But I never saw anything more of my horses, my dear friend!"

A Fortune in Strawberries.

J. P. Bryant, the Bardwell (Ky). millionaire, owns the largest strawberry patch in the world. It covers 1,700 acres and has made his fortune.

When a bride's husband goes away, it is necessary to amuse her, as they amuse a baby when its mother goes down town to a dry goods store.

THE YAQUI INDIANS.

THE STRONGEST AND FIERCEST OF ALL MEXICAN TRIBES.

Futile Efforts of the Spanish to Conquer Them—How a Brave Chief Kept Faith Under Extraordinary Provocation to Treachery.

The Yaquis are a people, Indians though they be, who have never been conquered. True, peace has from time to time been patched up between them and the Mexicans, but only after overwhelming losses on the part of the latter. The region inhabited by the Yaquis lies in the southern portion of the State of Sonora.

While even more fierce in the natures than the Indians of other tribes, the Yaquis are intellectually far above ordinary, to which fact is doubtless due their characteristic success in battle. Three centuries ago the Yaquis were the strongest and most formidable of all the tribes of Mexico. In Cortez's time their number was estimated at 50,000, and their haunts extended from Durango, in the south, throughout the entire northwestern part of Mexico, and all that portion of the United States as far north as Colorado.

The first war with the Yaquis dates back to the period when Coronado invaded this vast territory. The entrance of the Spaniards into their domain was viewed by the Indians as trespass, and was met with violent opposition on their part. The superior arms of the invaders, however, prevailed, and in one year the Yaquis lost over 20,000 of their tribe. Since that early date they have cherished the most bitter hatred for the Spaniards, and certain customs and encroachments originating with them and subsequently handed down to the Mexicans have been the cause of the almost perpetual warfare throughout the ensuing years. It is this continual strife that has proved so disastrous to the ranks of the Yaquis. In the early part of the present century their number had decreased to less than 37,000, while to-day there remains only about 15,000 of the once powerful tribe. Of this latter number there are about 5,000 able-bodied warriors. Such a force would at first seem insignificant, but the Yaquis are an extraordinary race of warriors. To begin with, the men are physically far superior to the troops with whom they are contending. Secondly, they are better armed, being equipped with Winchester rifles, whereas the standard Mexican arm is the Remington, and lastly, their stronghold in the Sierra Madre Mountains is practically invincible. Hence, to conquer those 5,000 Yaqui braves, provided the entire tribe has taken to the war-path, is a serious undertaking. The Mexican government doubtless realizes this only too well. From February, 1848, the date of the Guadaloupe Hidalgo treaty, until the treaty of Ortiz in July, 1897, there was scarcely a year that the troops were not engaged in fighting the Yaquis. And, finally, after the Mexican government had sacrificed over 35,000 soldiers and many millions of dollars in its vain endeavor to vanquish this restless foe, it was obliged to make overtures with terms satisfactory to the Indians before the latter would come down from the mountains and return to their former peaceful pursuits in the valley of the Yaqui River.

The manner in which this treaty was brought about involves the following story, related by one of General Torres's staff:

"In one of the many forays of 1896 and 1897, a young Yaqui warrior was wounded and captured. Instead of ordering him shot, Colonel Pinado, the officer in command, directed that he should have the kindest treatment. When the Indian recovered, Colonel Pinado set him free and asked him to bear a message to Chief Tetabiate, the Yaqui leader. In this message the Colonel proposed a conference to terminate the long war. Tetabiate, however, returned word that the fate of a former chief, Calemi, who had been lured down from the mountains on a similiar pretext and shot, was too fresh in his memory, and that he did not care to leave his defences to meet any Mexican officers in conference. He moreover stated bluntly that if Colonel Pinado wanted to see him, he would have to come into the mountains, attended only by the Indian messenger. He concluded with his assurance of personal safety to the Colonel, and promised that no attempt would be made to avenge Cajemi's death by breaking faith, as the Mexican General had done.

"Under the peculiar condition of affairs, it took a man of great courage to accept Tetabiate's invitation. Colonel Pinado, however, was thoroughly familiar with Yaqui character. He knew also that there was extraordinary provocation to break it in this instance. His brother officers were all opposed to the step, but when the matter was reported to General Torres, he ordered Pinado to proceed to the mountains and open negotiations with the Yaqui chief. The daring Mexican obeyed, and, departing with his solitary guide, penetrated the mountains for several miles. At length they came to a little valley, where stood the Yaqui chieftain, surrounded by a dozen of his braves. After the betrayal of Chief Cajemi, the tribe decreed that their chief should always be attended by not fewer than twelve warriors as a body guard. As he approached the group of Yaquis, Colonel Pinado handed his rifle to one brave and his revolver to another. Then he held out his hand to Tetabiate. The chief took it, and, patting the Colonel on the shoulder, said:

"'Colonel Pinado, I thought I was a brave man and a soldier, but by this act you have surpassed even a Yaqui's bravery.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Petticoated Highwayman.

A leading physician of Oconomowoc, Wis., had a singular experience some time ago. He has been out in the country visiting patients, and on his return was passing through a strip of woods just as darkness was approaching.

His horse was jogging leisurely along when a woman appeared by the roadside and asked him for a ride to town. The doctor complied with the request and the stranger was given a seat in the buggy. Soon afterward the doctor discovered that his passenger, instead of being a woman, was a man dressed in woman's clothes and armed with a revolver. For a brief interval he was at a loss as to what course to pursue. Finally he dropped his whip by the side of the road. His horse, a high-spirited animal was checked with some difficulty, and the doctor asked his passenger if "she" would not dismount and pick up the whip, as he could not leave the horse.

The request was complied with, but no sooner had "she" dismounted than the reins were loosened and doctor, horse and buggy were speeding down the road at a good racing gait. Two shots were fired from the revolver at the rapidly retreating buggy, neither of which took effect.

The physician who underwent this experience is at the head of one of the largest surgical institutions in the State of Wisconsin. He is possessed of great nerve and courage, and immediately after reaching the city a searching party was organized and every effort made to discover his mysterious assailant, but without result. In the vicinity where this happened there have been numerous holdups, but none so daring as this.

MEXICAN STREET NAMES.

A Fashion in Nomenclature That Is Appalling to the Stranger.

The street names of Mexico are something really appalling to the newcomer. Some years ago the streets of the city were renamed systematically with numerical avenues running east and west, and streets north and south, and although the new names are prominently posted on all the corner houses, they are never used except in official documents. Every one uses the old names. Many of these are place names, or streets are named for some occurrence or tradition, or for the character of the trades that formerly predominated in them. The number of names is infinitely multiplied because each block is regarded as a street and has a separate name. When the name of a street continues the same through more than one block, the various squares are designated as first, second, third, etc. Many of the street names seem very odd to foreigners. Those named for the deity and religious personages are numerous. For instance, there is the Heart of Jesus street, and the street of the Holy Ghost; Ave Maria street, and the avenue of the Love of God. Others are the street of the Saint of the True Cross, the Arches of Bethlehen, and the Graves of Saint Sunday street, the Bridge of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, and the street of The Crosses of Sorrow.

Not only are the names of streets unusual, but they are often found in the most incongruous locations. For instance, if you walk down Jesus street, and continue in the second block, you will be startled to find that you are then on the street of the New Slaughter House. The Alley of the Egg and Potato street are just as likely to be the prolongation of the Back of Saint Teresa street as any other. The street of the Seven Princes may no longer be inhabitated by royalty, but the avenue of Illustrious Men was named for real persons. The street of the Lost Child derived its name from a popular tradition, but the avenue of the Fifth of May was named for a famous battle with the French.

There are a large number of the capital's streets named for living things. There are the street of the Little Bird, street of the Fish, Bull street and Goat street, and streets of the Flies, Rats and Roosters. Then there are the the streets named for various tradesmen, as the streets of the Hatters, Tobacconists, Coachmen, Milkmen, etc. One short block glories in the name of the street of the False Entrance of Saint Andrew. The alley of the Little Candle Shop, the street of Heads, street of a Thousand Wonders, the Square of the Thief, are other oddities. It is not recorded exactly as to whether Sad Indian street and the street of Crazy People were named after those who endeavored to learn all the street names of the City of Mexico, but if you at least feel inclined to use harsh language after trying it yourself, you should first go over to Devil street.—Modern Mexico.

Brains Were Necessary.

When the City Councils of Pittsburg paid their annual visit to the municipal poor farm the other day there were included in the party a German and an Irishman who are great friends, but between whom a sharp line is drawn in the matter of nationality. Going through the home department, the German, with a suspicion of race prejudice, remarked:

"I notice that these people are nearly all Irish."

"So they are," the Irishman said; "but wait till we get over into the crazy house; that's where they keep the Dutch."

They entered the insane department just as an inmate who imagines he is a great orator, was making a speech in German.

"What did I tell you?" asked the Irishman.

"Oh, well," replied the German, "you can't go crazy if you haven't got brains."—New York Tribune.

"What did I tell you?" replied the German, "you can't go crazy if you haven't got brains."—New York Tribune.

A Change All Around.

"There goes a party who will be heard from," said Smith, pointing to a young man who was going down the street. "He has managed to keep his head in love and financial matters, and they are the two great tests.

"Two months ago he was a young man with all the world before him and with no prospects ahead of him except a determination to fight life's battles.

"He was in love with a young lady living in this city, but his financial condition prevented him from declaring his passion. Besides, he was not sure that the young lady in question cared for him.

"But by one of those curious turns of the wheel of fortune an old aunt, that he had never seen, died and left him a large sum of money. Without delay he called upon the young lady and asked her to marry him, saying nothing about the fortune that had been left him. He met with a point blank refusal.

"Two days later the girl heard of his unexpected windfall and wrote him a note saying, 'I have changed my mind.'

"His answer was just as short. It said:

"'So have I.'"—Detroit Free Press.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's parents and by Rev. Campbell, of Corunna, Mr. Orren Delong and Miss Olive Treesh were united in marriage Thursday evening, Aug. 24, 1899, at 5 o'clock.

There were about fifty guests present consisting of friends and relatives of the young couple. At the appointed hour the wedding march was rendered by Miss Maggie Snyder, a music teacher and esteemed friend of the bride's family, during which rendering a company consisting of the officiating minister, the intended couple, bridesmaid and groomsman marched down stairs. The bride and groom took their places under a beautiful arch prepared especially for the occasion. After a brief ceremony congratulations were extended by the guests and relatives. We were then invited to the dining room where a table was loaded down with many good things such as Mother Treesh and daughter Olive know very well how to prepare. The parents of the bride and groom are among the very best families of DeKalb county, and the young couple are exemplary in many if not all points of christian character. After supper the guests enjoyed an hour or two of music and jokes such as becomes an occasion of this kind and returned home leaving with the young couple, many good words and some very useful presents. We are certain that nothing but kind words and well wishes can be entertained toward this bright young couple as they start on their new relations in life.

Charged With Forgery.

Yesterday morning Walter R. Eberly of Waterloo was arrested on a charge of forgery. The facts are about this way. For two years or over, he has been renting a building of Mrs. R. J. Fisk, a part being occupied by Eberly as a laundry, and the rest as a dwelling. Lately he had got behind on his rent, so that he owed about $30. Learning that Eberly was about to move to Michigan, Mr. Fisk became anxious about his rent, and as he did not get it, was about to attach Eberly's goods. Learning this Eberly came to Fisk and claimed he had paid his rent, and to prove it showed Fisk a receipt from Mrs. Fisk for $25. Fisk pronounced the receipt a forgery, and had Eberly arrested and brought to Auburn where 'Squire Walter bound him over to court in $500 bonds, which were signed by Eberly's father-in-law, Wm. Ettinger. As far as we know, Eberly has been all right heretofore, but this case looks bad. The real receipt given by Mrs. Fisk was for $2, and then appears to have been changed to $25, by writing an "e" in place of the "o" in the original "two" and then adding the letters, "nty five," which would if proved on him, be forgey. It will all come out in the October court.

They Wanted Help.

Yesterday the board of commissioners of Williams county, Ohio, with their county attorney came over to Butler and met with two DeKalb commissioners, Mr. Gunsenhouser and Mr. Shultz. They wanted us to help them build three bridges in the road on the state line that runs along the east line of Troy township. Several years ago this road was established by joint action of the boards of the two counties, and the north half was assumed by us and the south half by Ohio. The Indiana law fixes it that way, but Ohio has no law on the subject. But ever since the road was laid out we have kept up the north, and Williams county the south end; so now our commissioners think the Ohio people must keep up their own line and not expect us to help them. The road on the Steuben line west of Hudson is kept up by DeKalb county, and we now have a bridge to build there. The east end is kept up by Steuben county. The Indiana law is that on all north and south joint roads the people on the west side must keep up the north part and those on the east, the south part. On all east and west roads the people on the south side keep up the west part and those on the north keep up the east part.

Indiana W. C T. U. Convention, Marion, October 6 to 10.

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., November 20 27.

Mrs. L. M. Stevens and Miss Anna Gordon will be the guests of the Indiana W. C. T. U. convention at Marion.

The State Loyal Temperance Legion convention will be held in connection with our State W. C. T. U. Convention at Marion. Miss Anna Gordon, Secretary of the World's Loyal Temperance Legion, will be present.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Last year Indiana made an increase of 1,150 members (not including honoraries) the greatest increase in membership of any state in the nation, and thus won the beautiful White Ribbon star-spangled banner offered by Miss Willard. In order to keep this banner next year, we must again make the greatest increase of any state in the nation. We are now several hundred members ahead of where we were this time last year; but unless there is a persistent effort made by the unions, we will not make sufficient increase to again claim the banner. Several other states are working hard for the banner. In reading their state papers, I notice that that they are telling about our victories, and urging their members to greater effort. Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, president of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Ella Brown, president of Kansas, both say that they expect to take the banner away from Indiana at Seattle. Will we let them do it? No! No!! No!!! Five thousand times No! It cannot be done if you, each one, secure one new member.

For every ten new members secured by a Union after July 15 whose dues are received by our state treasurer at the close of this quarter, a free lecture or address will be given by a State Organizer en route soon after the State convention. This offer is for every ten new members whose dues are paid. Will you help? Will you go out an invite some neighbor or friend in your church to join your union?

Upon the efforts of the earnest White Ribboners will depend our success. We can only keep the banner by increasing our membership. May God help every mother and sister to realize that wherever the W. C. T. U. is strong and active it is easier to keep a right influence over the boys and girls of their own homes. Loyally,

LULU F. MCWHIRTER.

The Musicale.

This was a most enjoyable meeting and all knew it would be. Hence the attendance was large. The first on the program was the organ prelude by Miss Flora Hoffman, followed by a piano selection by Mrs. Jennie Shull. Miss Mae Hamilton gave a recitation and Miss Ada Gonser of Ashley a vocal solo. In the vocal duet Mr. Baxter was sick and Mr. Hadsell took his place, Morris Widney being the other. Then came a violin solo by C. Reyher of Garrett, and a recitation by Miss Maud Culbert son of St. Joe, followed by a vocal solo by Mrs. M. A. Miser of Waterloo. Little Helen Garwood sang one of her always sweet songs, and was called back and and gave another to the great delight of the audience. Dr. Buchtel was to have given a violin solo, but was not able to be present. Miss Maud Trover sang a solo and was followed in a piano solo by Miss Maud Sembower of Garrett. Miss Gladys Halter of the same place gave a recitation, and Miss Mayme Buckley, accompanied by Mr. Reyher with violin and Will Franks with his clarinet, a piano solo. Miss Flossie Thompson of Garrett gave a piano solo. The closing piece was a vocal trio by Mrs. R. Shull, Mrs. Will Eckhart and Miss Della Weaver. We have only space to add that all did themselves great credit and we have nothing but words of praise for the entire program.

A True American.

Several of the sewer men yesterday thought they would play a joke on their Irish carpenter who has his headquarters on Jackson street under the shade trees by L. J. Miller's. Mr. McGrath having just completed a large tool box, adjourded for dinner and during his absence the men painted his box a brilliant green the colors of Old Ireland. On his return from dinner he was somewhat taken aback to see his handiwork so adorned with the emblem of his fathers. But although his brogue is distinctly Irish, his patriotism is solid. Irish wit asserted itself and he hastened up town, purchased an American flag and straightway nailed the stars and stripes to the top of the box. When last seen he was chuckling to himself over the success of his ruse. He is ready to defend his flag and woe be to any "dommed furriner" who attempts to haul it down.

ST. JOE.

M. F. Body is again quite sick.

Frank Barney is still confined to his home by muscular rheumatism

Mart Foote and lady of Butler visited with Mrs. Foote,s parents last Friday night.

Charley Johnson is spending his vacation with his parents, Fred Johnson and wife.

Will Hamlin and Orsin Reasoner are employed at Auburn on the big sewer.

Married, last Wednesday, by the Rev. Clark of the Christian church at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. Kepler Shull and Miss Millie Hamilton. They will make their future home one mile west of St. Joe. No cake.

Mrs. James H. Abel has returned home after quite a long visit with her brother in Berrien county, Michigan.

Died, last Thursday, at the home of her son-in-law, Charles Rhodes, two miles west of Spencerville, Mrs. Louisa Burley, widow of Harper Burley. Mrs. Burley was an old resident, having come to this county in 1836 or '37. She had passed her three-score and ten and was beloved by all who knew her.

Attorney Dan Link was in town Wednesday of last week in consultation with our town board and as a result of his visit the depot sidewalk is gone.

Well, the city dads have done it; that is, they have had that naughty old sidewalk leading to the depot removed and now what was a thing of beauty is mud from end to end, especially when it rains. The prospect for another walk at present is not very flattering. An effort will be made to have a gravel walk put down by donation. We heard one man say he would give thirty cents; who will be next?

The annual meeting of the Disciple church was held in Railroad Park Saturday, Sunday and Monday last. In point of numbers it was a grand success. The church people have done a great deal of work at the park and we are glad that success has crowned their labors. Garrett, Auburn, Butler, Waterloo, Hicksville, Edgerton, and Maysville each sent a lot of people to help swell the crowd.

WEST WILMINGTON.

The ladies of Norris Chapel met last Thursday and organized a ladies' aid society.

On last Thursday morning the Dillon church bell rang out long and loud. Upon inquiry we learned that the members of that church thought their minister needed their attention. So about thirty of them went to Waterloo in a quiet and orderly manner, called on Rev. Snyder and wife and proceeded to give them an old fashioned "pounding." And they told when they returned, that they enjoyed it very much.

Mother Griffin died Thursday last, at the advanced age of 89. Funeral at Dillon conducted by Rev. Snyder, after which she was taken to Auburn for burial.

Harry Marr of Stafford township was the guest of Boyd Rhoads a couple of days last week. They also visited Auburn to see the big sewer.

John Moore's new house is being pushed right along and will be a model of convenience and beauty when completed.

Walter Moudy is suffering severely from some eye trouble and can get no relief. He goes to Fort Wayne Thursday for treatment if relief does not come sooner.

Quarterly meeting will be held at Mooresville, September 2 and 3. Rev. Tedrow will speak Sunday evening on "My Trip to Florida."

HICKSVILLE FAIR

COME AND SEE THE AGRICULTURAL MONUMENT.

A DUPLICATE OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The primary object of any fair should be a means of giving farmers an opportunity of comparing notes with their fellow farmers. For who can know how and when to improve, or whether he should be encouraged or discouraged, if he has no means of comparing his results with those of others. I do not think that the Hicksville Fair association is deterorating.

From what I have seen of the good features that go to make an educational fair, and from what I have not seen that would tend to demoralize and degrade, I am sure that the Hicksville Fair, although there is some room for improvement, is a credit to the management and is worthy of the support of all the farmers in western Ohio and eastern Indiana.

Too many fairs are degenerating, and there are fairs showing improvements. We have a few fairs in mind which have been striking exceptions in the matter of success last season. Hicksville is one, but these fairs have every one been clean.

The fair which would be long lived and continuously successful must be decent in tone and decidedly agricultural in character. The hand writing is on the wall for every other kind of a fair.

Without the patronage of the country folks no fair can be successful, and the average countryman will go farther and stay longer to see a good trotting or pacing meeting than any thing else on earth. I don't blame them in that respect. I am a countryman fifty-two weeks in a year.

I do believe it is a living truth that Hicksville has the best fair in western Ohio. The fountain water is the purest to be found on any fair ground in the state.

You get your premium money promptly. You don't have to fight or run a foot race to get it. The secretary sends you a check good at any bank or business house in Hicksville. They pay 100 cents on a dollar. If they have money left the large hearted managers use it to beautify the grounds.

Every family of hard working people with five in a family, for every day spent at the fair will add one year to their lives. Every dollar to the amount of three dollars spent at the fair is better than money at ten per cent interest. Every doctor attends the fair for his health. Bring your family and you will find old familiar faces. They will keep bobbing up every now and then, and friends that have not met for years will shake hands and argue the good and bad points of stock and thoroughly enjoy themselves. Come boys and bring your girls. If you have not got a horse and carriage, borrow one of the girl you don't like, and bring a girl you do like.

One word to croakers and fault finders. You go home at night with lots of pelts. If you see a man with a Roman nose, you want to see a Grecian nose, and if you meet a man with a Grecian nose then you want to see a Roman nose. Come this year and be men; examine the stock of all kinds and profit by it. Don't miss the hogs; see if they are razor backs, wind splitters, regular Arkansas hogs. See if their noses, metaphorically speaking, would reach through a rail fence and harvest corn from the third row. See if the largest thing about them is their squeal. See if they are kin.

When Hicksville has her fair you can't keep the people away in good weather. I want two weeks of perfect fall weather for our next fair, September 12 to 15, 1899, so I consulted the most celebrated hoodoo weather prophet in Defiance county. He would not tell me short of two bits. I gave them to him and he tasted them to see if they were real money, then he gave me a rabbit's foot, a bird claw and two blades of grass and told me to wear them in my hat for two weeks, and if I followed his instructions my wish should be granted. I am just as sure we will have ten thousand people on the Hicksville fair ground Thursday as I am that we will have good weather.

One word to the citizens of Hicksville. I heard a person say they had never attended a fair since they lived in Hicksville. Don't say it again. It is every citizen's duty to do what they can for the progress of Hicksville. Without the Hicksville fair your property would be worth less. All improvements add value. Come to the fair if you take any interest in yourself and town's progress and have a good sociable time. When I attend the fair I meet the same boys and the same girls that I went to school with forty years ago. Come old school mates, let us meet this year and be young for one day at least.—A FRIEND OF GOOD FAIRS. 35

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A New York doctor has discovered that there are fifty varieties of rheumatism, but the sufferer usually thinks there are at least 100.

According to official figures Great Britain expends $90,000,000 a year on the support of the poor. This does not include private charities.

Some day there will be no international boundary line between Canada and the United States. In the hearts of the people of both countries there is none now.

One healthful sign in amateur sports is the great revival of interest this year in tennis and rowing. Our young men are getting back to first principles and making the best of their time in exercise that is most helpful to the human system.

An English (Ind.) clergyman refuses to pay poll-tax on the ground that he is church property; the property of the congregation as much as is the pastoral residence and that, as such, he is exempt from taxation, the same as the parsonage.

Having repudiated the dum-dum bullet, some of the European nations may go so far as to abolish Siberian exile, imprisonment for lese majeste, compulsory army service and numerous other blemishes on civilization.

The Pittsburg Times takes great pleasure in the reception accorded the Tenth Pennsylvania regiment in San Francisco upon its return from the Philippines, and says: "Such a demonstration as that accorded by the true Americans of San Francisco toward their fellow-citizens of Pennsylvania served to show that this whole nation is one people and to knit closer the bonds of the Union."

Europe has always respected us as an industrial people, but since the Spanish war she has learned that in an emergency we are also a military people. A community of educated men make the best fighters in the world. They have something to fight for, and when intelligence is wedded to courage there is apt to be a victory. Europe has not discovered that fact until recently, and its regard for us and its friendliness toward us have been greatly increased.

In 1857 the coinage of the big copper pennies, which everybody has seen, was suspended. Up to that time they had been coined regularly for sixty-five years. In all, 156,000,000 of the big, awkward coins had been put into circulation. Not more than one-fourth of that number have been paid back to the government or exchanged for other coin.

The discussion over the naming the horseless carriage continues. The Terre Haute Gazette contributes the characteristically American suggestion that if "cab" is good enough for cabriolet, "aut" ought to answer for an automobile. Anything for brevity. The bicycle has become a "bike" in the speech of many persons; a sleeping car or coach a "sleeper;" pantaloons, "pants;" gentlemen, "gents;" thank you, "thanks;" an ocean line steamship, a "liner," etc. So, in those happy days when everybody will own a horseless carriage we will all go "auting" in our "auts."

Interesting statistics in reference to the migration of the Jews have just been published in London. There are now four and a half millions of Jews in Russia, over a million in Austria, 150,000 in England and 930,000 in the United States. This indicates a gradual growth for England and the states, for in the beginning of the century there were only 14,000 Jews in England and 1,000 in the United States. The increase of the race in the English-speaking countries about agrees with its diminution in the east.

What this country needs to-day is men of broad minds and wide information, men who can grasp the big subjects which the new commercialism every day brings to the front thinks the Dry Goods Economist. At present only a few possess these qualifications. If an opportunity to acquire them were placed within the reach of the many; if, as a result, thousands of men had an understanding of the matters which to-day "are Greek" to the great majority, not only would this country make great material progress—greater even than is already presented in its marvellous history—but whatever of our governmental system is allied to commercial and financial matters would be managed with ten times the ability that it is to-day.

Fitness, which is a homely little title expressive of the harmony of things and places, is a distinct principle of art. A carving that is beautiful and appropriate in one place becomes grotesque in another, like an ill-fitting garment or a false note in music. High success in the humblest of the handicrafts involves not alone faithful study and persistent practice, but a continual searching for subtle truths. There are noble possibilities for achievement in every branch of mechanical arts, and it is good to see a joyous young company pressing these upward paths, pleasant and wholesome to tread observes the San Francisco Chronicle.

Recently Queen Victoria rashly expressed a desire to be serenaded. By this time she must heartily wish her desire recalled. According to a local paper, enthusiastic serenaders surround Windsor Castle day and night singing in varying keys the National Anthem. Detached parties and groups vie with other in their efforts to gratify the royal whim, until at length, in desperation and wrath caused by loss of sleep, Her Majesty posted lackeys on the grounds to shoo off the intending vocalists. The spectacle of successive groups of stolid Britons solemnly serenading the Widow o' Windsor at opportune and inopportune hours is too funny.

At the recent session of the American Medical Association Dr. Daniel B. Brower, professor of mental diseases in Rush Medical College, Chicago, made the startling statement that "crime in the United States is increasing in a vastly more rapid ratio than is the population." He said present laws were defective because they were principally directed against crime and not against the criminal. A judge should also be a physician, and in making up sentence should consider the biological condition of the criminal. The checking process should begin with the children of degenerates. These should be taken care of by the courts and placed in favorable environment at the age of seven years. And as a high essential in this scheme of reform, the pardoning power, said Doctor Brower, should be transferred from the political officers of the State to a board "whose members should be skilled in criminal anthropology."

Sir Richard Webster deserves to go down into history as the maker of one of the longest speeches of his time. His recent presentation of the geographical argument before the Venezuelan tribunal, defending the British claims, extended over thirteen days, four hours of each day being given to its delivery. In other words, he actually spoke for fifty-two hours. "Everything he could possibly say has been said," wrote a correspondent who heard the whole speech, and who adds with a touch of unconscious pathos, "But the final impression was that the case was essentially weak." Think of talking for thirteen days and not proving anything!

In a sensational case in London the utterances of a favorite parrot gave the first clue to the suitor's evidence. The case was worked up on the basis of names of persons and of epithets many times repeated by the bird, which had been an ear-witness to interviews. The parrot was thus the first and most important witness. How to use it or what it has repeated in a legal way is the problem. Can its testimony be accepted? Can it be cross-examined? Can evidence corroborating what it has uttered be considered? It is alleged that the parrot has disclosed facts important to the suit, but so far no one has found out the extent to which they may be used legally.

A writer in a German paper, while admitting that the German educational methods and institutions are held up as models, and rightly so, to the other nations of the world, and that to such methods and institutions a large measure of Germany's prestige is due, raises the question whether such success has not been attained by sapping the heart blood of the nation. This inquiry he accompanies by the remarkable statement that during the ten years ending in 1896 not less than 407 school children, of whom 331 were boys, in Prussia alone, succumbed under the strain of education and took their own lives before they had arrived at the age of fifteen years, the extremely significant fact appearing also that without a single exception these children were pupils of elementary schools and schools where training for a particular profession is given.

WIRELESS TORPEDOES.

Deadly Weapons Steered From Shore With No Material Connection.

Contemporaneous with the sitting of the International Peace Conference came the announcement of a new invention by which torpedoes are to be rendered more deadly in modern warfare than heretofore.

The invention, due to Messrs. Walter Jamieson and John Trotter, consists in utilizing the "ethereal" or "Hertzian" waves, which are the basis of wireless telegraphy, as a means of steering and controlling torpedoes on their deadly mission.

The apparatus is made in several forms, which differ principally in the means by which the current induced by the waves is applied to the steering mechanism. The best arrangement consists of a coil of iron wire or "solenoid" that becomes magnetic on receiving the ethereal waves, and is thus rendered capable of sucking into itself a magnet, the motion of which brings about any desired change in the steering gear of the torpedo.

The latter is fitted with two rods, which project above the water and serve as "receivers"—that is, means of collecting the waves. Each of the rods is in connection with a coil of the type described, one on the right of the torpedo and one on the left; and, according as the right hand or the left hand rod absorbs the waves, so the torpedo is guided to the right or left.

The means adopted in using the apparatus is as follows: Suppose that the torpedo is fired in the usual manner and that its course is seen to swerve from its proper course. From the torpedo boat electric waves are immediately dispatched by the processes used in wireless telegraphy, in such a manner that they only affect either the right or left hand coil controlling the helm, which is thus turned in any required direction, and the original course of the torpedo reproduced.

When this is accomplished the electric waves are stopped, and the helm flies back to the midship position.

Large models of the apparatus have been experimented with, and it is said that perfect success has been obtained under all possible conditions. Since the new method of guiding torpedoes is greatly superior to the old, which made use of electric wires, it is evident that the new invention will be an important factor in future naval warfare.

Edison's Lucky Scratch.

Thomas A. Edison said the other day regarding his invention of the phonograph: "I was singing in the mouthpiece of a telephone where the vibration of my voice caused a steel wire point to scratch one of my fingers. That set me to thinking. I determined to record the motions of just such wire points on a cylinder, and the result was the phonograph. But it cost me many sore fingers."—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

A Specimen Georgia Fish.

Mr. J. Prewitt has bought a catfish that was caught in Hiawassee river that weighed fifty-six pounds. He dressed the fish and extracted five pints of oil from its body. The meat readily brought 12½ cents per pound and the oil is worth $1 per pint.—Blue Ridge (Ga.) World.

Figures of Presidential Election of 1896, and Congressional Election Following, with Reference to Next Year's Campaign.

(New York Herald.)

Map Showing Election Results of 1896, Republican States Shaded.

Republican Vote, 7,104,779; Representing 271 Electoral Votes.
Democratic Vote, 6,502,925; Representing 176 Electoral Votes.

Map Showing Election Results of 1898, Republican States Shaded.

Republican Vote, 5,499,064; Representing 272 Electoral Votes.
Democratic Vote, 5,427,224; Representing 175 Electoral Votes.

THE active work of the presidential campaign of 1900 began recently in Chicago, where the Democratic national committee met and indorsed the Chicago platform of 1896 and Mr. Bryan, who was present. Mr. Bryan at present has control of the machinery of the party, and there seems little doubt of his renomination. Some of the leading gold Democrats of 1896 are announcing their opposition to the platform and candidate once more, but the exact amount of opposition within the party cannot be determined for some time.

Mr. Bryan's friends lay claim to success on the following grounds:

1. Most gold Democrats will vote for Bryan either because they do not like the treatment they have received from Republicans or because they are opposed to imperialism.

2. Many former Republicans will vote for Bryan because they are opposed to trusts and imperialism and because they think free silver would help the situation.

3. A reaction against an administration always sets in, and in normal times it is virtually impossible to re-elect any President.

4. Bryan is better known than in 1896, fear of a panic no longer exists and this country is able to establish free silver on its own account and maintain it.

The Republican view is quite different. They prophesy McKinley's re-election on the following grounds:

1. McKinley's successful administration of civil and military affairs.

2. The prosperity that has come from the Dingley tariff and the gold standard.

3. Gold Democrats will not support Bryan and the Democratic party cannot be made to unite on any one.

The study of election figures of 1897 and 1898 is interesting at this time. No one will claim that they necessarily foretell the result in 1900, but they do give a pretty correct idea of what the Democrats must overcome in order to win. The two diagrams given herewith show the results of the elections in 1896 and 1898, the Republican States being shaded. It will be noted that McKinley carried a compact body of States covering the northeast section of the country and Oregon and California in addition. These States represented a total of 271 electoral votes, Bryan capturing one in California and one in Kentucky. The vote for the two leading candidates was: being the largest vote ever cast in a presidential election. These totals vary slightly from some other estimates, as some persons count the votes of the highest electors and some the lowest, while others give the average. McKinley's total plurality was little more than his pluralities in New York and Pennsylvania combined.

There were few State elections in 1897, and in none of them were the changes important except that New York and Kentucky went Democratic.

In 1898 there were State elections in all but a few of the States and in all the congressional districts. The diagram above shows which States were carried by each party, those by Republicans being shaded. It will be noted that the Democrats gained over 1896 only two States—Kentucky and Minnesota—and the latter only on the governorship, where fusion elected a popular Scandinavian by 20,000 plurality, though the Republicans carried every congressional district by pluralities aggregating over 32,000.

On the other hand, the Republicans gained Washington, Wyoming, Kansas and South Dakota, which have twenty-one electoral votes, the same as Kentucky and Minnesota. The total vote in 1898 in the various States foots up as follows: Republican, 5,499,065; Democratic, 5,427,224.

The vote in the electoral college represented by these States are: Republican, 272; Democratic, 175, or within one vote of the result in 1896, the difference being accounted for by the Bryan vote in California.

What Mr. Bryan must have to win is forty-nine more electoral votes than his party carried last fall. In all probability he must have fifty-eight votes, for Minnesota can scarcely be imagined as a sure Democratic State. As to where these votes would come from in case of Mr. Bryan's election, those interested in the subject may figure out for themselves with the aid of the above maps and the following table, which gives the electoral vote of each State:

AUTOCARS FOR THE MAILS.

Postoffice Department Experiments with Them in Buffalo.

For some time past the Chicago postal authorities have been experimenting with autocars for use in the postal service. Heretofore collection wagons have been hauled by weary horses. In the big down-town district where collections are of hourly happening men on foot do the work. But in the outer districts the contract wagon with its despondent nag is the real thing. But the Government has had its attention called to the fact that it is possible to collect the mails by means of horseless carriages. Experiments so far seem to demonstrate the practicability of the idea. In Buffalo N. Y., the use of such cars has been successful, but it should be borne in mind that Buffalo is a city of asphalt streets and lack of grades. Chicago postal authorities do not believe that they will prove successful in the outlying districts of Chicago, although swifter service is a thing much to be desired.

So long as the project is wholly in the experimental stage no special type of mail car to be operated automatically can be fixed upon as the style of greatest utility. But in the cases where cars have been used a general type has been used. Capacity for the storage of bundles of letters is a prerequisite. The express wagons used have great storage capacity. They are electric cars with storage batteries as motors. In the mail cars the same general plan has so far been carried out.

The wagons are much like those now in use. They have a covered seat, where the operator can sit and manage the machine. They lie low on sturdy trucks of iron, but light in construction. They have the covered body with a door in the rear, which can be locked after the collector has deposited the contents of a mail box. They have thirty-inch wheels with pneumatic tires and are otherwise the same wagons now in use where a bedraggled and melancholy horse is the drawing power.

The principal change to be noted in these wagons is that the rear trucks carry nearly all of the carrying capacity. The gearing will be rigged much like a four-wheeled hose reel of light steel, with a space back of the forward trucks for the placing of the battery or whatever kind of motor is to be used. The vehicle back of this will hang low as the ordinary mail wagon does, thus providing a receptacle for the collections. The machine can be operated by one man, as is the case at present. He will sit in the box seat in front, where the motor and steering gear will come close to the hand. When the vehicle is stopped for any purpose he can dismount and take on or discharge his collections as readily if not more so than he does now while his nag is browsing on the grass plats near the curb.

Strength and lightness are the two essentials in the construction. Recent experiments seem to demonstrate that the automobile can be used on country roads with as much success as the bicycle can.

The Fear of Fear.

Some one says the only thing to fear is fear, and that's about right. That doesn't mean that one is to go about in a state of cheerful idiocy, caressing every buzz saw he comes across in the absurd idea that nothing can do him harm. That would be invoking the fool-killer, who does sometimes catch up with such people. It means the practical application of the idea that there are two things one need not worry about—what he can help and what he cannot help. If a thing can be helped, it's help and not worry that it needs, and if it cannot be helped, it is high time that the "incident be closed," as the diplomats say.—Chicago Drovers' Journal.

THE OLD MAIL WAGONS AND THE NEW.

NATURE'S WAR PAINT.

Dark Backs and Light Breasts Make Birds Almost Invisible.

Passing through the Natural History Museum a day or two ago, my eye was arrested by a case which apparently contained a gray, duck-like bird facing its own ghost. The "no passage" barrier precluded closer inspection, and for five minutes I stood staring at the case, unable to make out what that wraith-like, almost invisible bird-form might be.

I had given it up, when the descriptive tablet, which had been pushed aside, came to my assistance. The exhibit is designed by a clever American naturalist to show why Nature has colored most wild beasts and birds dark above and light below.

The visible bird was a model clad in flannel of dingy-gray, and against a background of similar hue it showed up distinctly, thanks to the light on its back and its own shade.

Its ghost-like companion, clad in the same way, owed its invisibility to the application of a little dark paint on its back and a little white paint underneath after the fashion affected by scores of birds.

It seems incredible that such painting could make the difference, but so it is.

How Cloves Are Gathered.

More cloves are said to be used in America than in any other country, England and France following in the order named. In this country and in Great Britain they are used almost wholly as a condiment, but in France they are used largely in the manufacture of certain liqueurs. To some degree they are employed in medicine for their tonic properties. The name clove is from the French clou, meaning a nail. The tree is an evergreen, growing from forty to fifty feet high, with large, oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same family as the guava, the pomegranate and the rose apple. The cloves are at first white, then light green, and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at the harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color which proclaims them ready for shipment. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of about ten years; and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and the other in December. Hot weather is favorable to the crop, although a little fog is said to improve the flavor.—New York Press.

No Mustaches in Alaska.

Men exposed to the rigors of the Alaska winter never wear mustaches. They wear full beards to protect the throat and face, but keep the upper lips clean shaven. The moisture from the breath congeals so quickly that a mustache becomes embedded in a solid cake of ice and the face is frozen in a short time.

AN EXILED MONUMENT.

Germany Would Not Permit Its Erection—New York Dedicates It.

In Bronx borough, New York, has been unveiled a monument with a unique and romantic history. It is a sculptured exile driven from Germany because of the bitter feeling that still exists against the man whom it commemorates.

The monument is a fountain, representing the Lorelei, famous in German song and legend, and commemorating Heine, the poet, whose verses of German legend—and particularly of the Lorelei—are familiar in every German household, but whose advocacy of liberty made him detestable to German royalty. Heine has been dead years, but his memory is as much an object of hatred in governmental circles as he was himself.

The monument was designed by Prof. Herter, one of Germany's foremost artists. Surmounting the whole is a female figure of the Lorelei—the legendary siren who dwelt in a cave on the River Rhine and lured men to destruction in the whirlpool. The work was admired by all Germans, but when its erection was attempted at Frankfort the authorities forbade the work to go on. Then it was taken to Dusseldorf, Hamburg and other cities, with similar results. Finally a number of wealthy New Yorkers agreed to buy it and put it up in New York. Here again there was an objection. It was said that Heine was not an American and had nothing to do with this country. After a long struggle the objection was overcome and now the memorial is in place in the northern end of the city. The sculptured merman and mermaids at the fountain's base will lead to a better knowledge of the delightful legends of the Rhine.

THE HEINE FOUNTAIN.

Well Supplied with Wives.

This is from the Terak, East India, Pioneer: "Tuan Syed Mahomed bin Abdulla al-Hadad of Singapore has arrived on a visit to his co-religionists. The gentleman has seen some seventy-eight summers and is accompanied by his harem, which consists of four wives and two slaves. We are told that he never allows the number of his wives to fall short of the figure given above, and that he has altogether contracted no less than 117 marriages."

BEFORE THE ALMIGHTY.

Boers Solemnly Swore to Defend Their Beloved Country.

The accompanying illustrations refer to the Boer meeting recently held at Paardekraal, South Africa, the scene of the declaration of independence in 1880. About 5,000 Boers were present and were addressed by Gen. Joubert and other speakers. The tone of the meeting was that not another hair would be conceded, and Gen. Joubert called on all present to remember the solemn oath taken by them in 1880, when each Boer, holding a stone in his hand, took an oath before the Almighty that they would shed their last drop of blood, if needs be, for their beloved country. These stones were then cast into one great heap, over which the historic monument of Paardekraal was raised.

FRANCE HONORED HER.

Rewarding Heroism with a Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Jennie Creek, of the village of Mellgrove, near Hartford City, Ind., is the youngest person in the world who is a member of the French Legion of Honor.

JENNIE CREEK.

It was in the afternoon of Sept. 10, 1893, that brave little Jennie, then but 10 years old, was gathering autumn grass along the ledges and in the ravines of her uncle's farm. As she strolled thro' the woods she was attracted by the smell of burning timber. Her search resulted in her finding the railroad bridge, which spanned a deep gulch, almost burned away. It had taken fire from the burning grass, fired from a redhot cinder of a passing engine. The little girl knew it was but a short time until the World's Fair fast train would be due. She had no time to summon help, for far down the whistle of the oncoming train was heard. As it drew nearer its terrible roar grew louder and seemed to almost freeze her blood. The train with its cargo of passengers was not a half-mile away when the frightened little heroine tore off her red petticoat, and, trembling with fear and excitement, she sped toward the train, waving her signal of danger wildly in the air. The engineer reversed his engine and the train stopped on the brink of the chasm.

The story of her timely action spread rapidly among the passengers, and the little girl, who had hastened for home, was overtaken by two newspaper men, who brought her back and carried her through the train. The gratitude of the passengers was shown by the raising of a purse of no small sum.

On the train were quite a number from France returning home after a visit to the World's Fair. When they reached their native country, the Society of the Legion of Honor was told of America's young heroine. President McKinley, then Governor of Ohio, was asked for the child's address, and a month later little Jennie received a five-pointed gold star, an emblem worn only by those who have performed exceptionally brave deeds.

KILLED IN NAPHTHA EXPLOSION.

Explosive Liquids That Are as Fatal to Life as Poisons.

The accidental death in Washington of Mrs. Dickins, wife of Capt. F. W. Dickins, who perished in a naphtha explosion in her home, draws attention to the danger of this highly volatile and inflammable liquid.

Mrs. Dickins was cleaning a room and some of the liquid had been spilled in a hallway. A plumber at work in the house set down his furnace on the spot. Instantly there was an explosion which knocked down the plumber and set fire to everything inflammable. The explosion penetrated to the room in which Mrs. Dickins was engaged, killing her almost instantly. Cases similar in their fatal results are of common occurrence every year owing to the careless handling of naphtha, gasolene and other explosive oils. Many of these evolve a combustible vapor at all temperatures, which, forming with the atmosphere, produces an explosive mixture. Great care at all times is required in their use and even with the greatest care the element of danger is never wholly removed. It is much better to let these substances alone unless one is thoroughly familiar with their nature and always on guard in their use.

Coal Ashes for Fruit Trees.

Coal ashes certainly is a valuable article for fruit trees, especially the peach, writes D. A. Shaw. I have tried it and find no insects will stay where coal ashes are applied, not even ants. Apply by scraping away a little of the earth around base of tree, and make a little mound of ashes around the trunk. When the tree is affected with borers make the mound higher than when the ruinous worms are at work. Throw some ashes up against the trunk of the tree also, and the borers and other insect pests will leave. Of course I don't claim that this will protect the fruit on the tree; you should use the poison spray for that.

TREASURES OF INDIA.

COUNTRY A VAST STOREHOUSE OF RICHES.

Wonderful Collection of Jewels Owned by Native Princes—A Single Shawl that Cost Five Millions—Fortunes Invested in Pearls and Diamonds.

That India, after a foreign occupation of some centuries, and in spite of the apparent poverty of the great bulk of the people, is still probably the greatest treasure house on earth is due to the fact that for ages it was, with Ceylon and Burma, the field which supplied the rest of the world not only with gold, costly fabrics and spices, but with precious stones, the finest specimens of which, however, were ever retained by the Hindoo and Mogul princes for their own personal adornment.

One of the jewel treasures of the Indian princes, that of the Gashwar of Baroda, is perhaps the most remarkable, being appraised by experts a few years ago at the immense sum of three hrors of rupees, or $15,000,000. Among his collection, his chief diamond necklace, worn on state occasions, contains the "Star of the South," a Brazilian stone weighing 254 carats, for which $400,000 was paid, the whole necklace being valued at forty lacs of rupees, or $1,000,000. The masterpiece in his possession, however, is a wonderful shawl composed entirely of inwrought pearls and other precious stones worked in the most harmonious and artistic arabesque patterns, and which actually cost the extraordinary price of $5,000,000.

This shawl was intended as a present to cover the tomb of Mohammed, but when it was finished the Gashwar thought twice of the idea and kept it himself. While it is true that the native jewelers as a rule care less for the purity and commercial value of the stones than for the general effect produced, yet their artistic feeling and skill in setting gems, often but poorly cut and polished, cannot be surpassed. As an evidence of this, a comb of matchless workmanship was presented to the Prince of Wales by the Raja of Jaipur. Another present which the Prince of Wales received on his visit to India in 1875 was a sword from the Maharaja of Kashmir, set with diamonds and emeralds valued at $25,000, in addition to which there was a solitaire diamond in the belt worth $10,000.

Probably one of the most expensive hats ever worn by any person apart from an actual crown was that of Sir Jung Bahadur, prime minister to the King of Nepal, when he paid his formal respects to the Prince of Wales on the latter entering the dominions of Sir Jung's master, for in addition to a magnificent headdress of diamonds worth over $100,000, he wore in an aigrette a single ruby the size of a marble, presented to him by the Emperor of China, and of inestimable value.

At the grand darbar, held at Delhi, the ancient capital of the Mogul empire, when Queen Victoria was proclaimed Kaisar-T-Hind (Empress of India), the costumes of some of the native princes appeared to have beggared description.

The Maharaja Holhar, for instance, presumably as a small item in respect to the rest of his attire, wore a certain pair of gloves made of delicate gold flexible scale work, encrusted with diamonds, having in the center of each back an emerald.

Of single stones the late King of Visapur owned two fine rubies, one of which weighed 50¾ carats, and the other, a perfect, flawless stone, 17½, both being valued respectively at $12,000 and $15,000. These stones mysteriously disappeared, but should any one chance to rediscover them, they would, at the present value of rubies, be worth at least ten times their former price.

Among several stones not accounted of the first value in the West, the cat's-eye is a great favorite with Orientals, a very fine specimen being in the possession of the Nizam of Haidarabad, which cost $25,000.

Pearls are much prized by all the native princes, the Raja of Travancore having an embroidered cap or turban of these gems worth $70,000, while the largest pearl known, the size of a pear, and practically unappraisable, is in the possession of the Shah of Persia.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A VALUABLE STAMP.

Craved by Collectors, It Is Burned by a Careless Domestic.

In the year 1851 a 12-penny black Canadian postage stamp was printed by the Government at Ottawa. The public did not regard this somber issue with favor, so few were issued.

One of these stamps was sent to the Hamilton postoffice, where it was sold to an old gentleman, who said it was a shame to print the Queen's picture on a stamp that might be handled by profane hands. Tenderly the old gentleman put it on a parcel, sending it to a friend in the United States. Here, in the waste basket, it lay for many a day, till an errand boy found it and quickly transferred it to his album. Despairing of getting a good collection, and his fever for stamps somewhat abating, he sold them to a dealer. The new owner, on looking at the catalogue, found that what he had paid $5 for was worth $25.

Accidentally this stamp was slipped into a 25-cent packet and sent to a dealer residing in Hamilton. When the latter opened the packet he was astonished to find such a valuable stamp, and, being honest, wrote his friend to inform him of what had happened, offering him $1,200 for it. The offer was accepted, and the stamp again changed hands. By this time the stamp had increased in value, and not a few came from a distance to look at the treasure. One day an English nobleman, who, through a Canadian friend, had heard of the stamp, offered $1,500, which offer was accepted. The English lord, falling in love with an American heiress, and wishing to gain the favor of her brother, presented him with the stamp as a token of esteem. Here, in its new and luxurious American home, it came to a sad end, for one day the maid, by mistake, swept the stamp, which had accidentally fallen out of the album, into the fire. In an instant the stamp which thousands had heard of and longed for went up in smoke to the broad, blue sky, leaving not a trace behind.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Gives Much to Charity.

We hear less about Portugal than about Spain at any time, and of late have heard less than usual. The queen of Portugal is a sovereign deserving a long mark for her interest in hospitals and hygiene, and also in the welfare of the children of poverty. At Alcantara she founded, in 1893, a dispensary peculiarly for meeting the demands of childish invalids, as pleasantly situated as possible, and spaciously planned, combining a diet kitchen, consultation rooms, surgical halls, and much of the departmental work of a hospital. Almost every day the queen herself goes to the establishment and takes a personal share in the labors of the charity, now waiting in the kitchen distributions and again assisting in the surgery.

Several well-known women of her court are equally practical. The general charge of it is committed to a religious order, a favorite of the queen's, but the eminent Portuguese physician, Dr. Silva Carvalho, heads the staff of medical workers. In one year (1895) there were given in the building 8,559 consultations, 63,704 rations from the diet kitchen, 32,521 bandages, 76,480 prescriptions and 470 vaccinations. The milk and vegetables are furnished gratis by the queen, and the medical supplies are also defrayed by her. Fifteen hundred babies were treated in the twelvemonth. It is said that there is not any royal charity of the sort in Europe so efficiently managed, with the additional active co-operation of the founder.—Harper's Weekly.

San Francisco has raised some $32,500 of the desired $100,000 for a monument to Admiral Dewey to be set up in that city.

American exports to South Africa, which have quadrupled within five years, are being seriously affected by the Transvaal troubles.

A New Orleans man is said to have invented a sugar cane planter, in the form of a wagon, that with three men and four mules will do the work heretofore done by nine men and nine mules.

There is a family of seven big brothers, born in Kentucky and nearly all living in that State, whose average weight, with that of their father, is 207 pounds. They claim to be the biggest family in the State.

A railroad official in a recent lecture stated that it cost his road each year about $1,000 for pins; $5,000 for rubber bands; $5,000 for ink; $7,000 for lead pencils—also that it cost nearly as much for stationery to carry on the business as for iron.

Copper has risen and aluminum declined until the price of the two metals is almost the same. One pound of aluminum is equivalent to two of copper in carrying electrical energy and, if it were as easy to work and solder, would probably displace copper to a considerable extent.

Lightning caused the death of 367 persons in the United States last year and a loss in property of $1,441,880. Few of the deaths occurred in cities. The annual number of thunderstorms in this country is from thirty-five to forty-five. The maximum is in the Southeastern States.

Four agents of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad measure in height, respectively, 6 feet 3 inches, 6 feet 3 inches, 6 feet feet ½ inch, and 6 feet 3½ inches, and their aggregate weight is 1,018 pounds. They have been photographed together, and would like to hear from any other railroad that can furnish a group of four their equals in feet and pounds.

The former residence of the late Theodore Parker, the liberal Unitarian preacher, in West Roxbury, Mass., has been sold to Archbishop Williams, and will, probably, be occupied by a Roman Catholic priest. On the land adjoining a Catholic church is to be erected. The house was built ninety-nine years ago, and Mr. Parker lived in it from 1837 to 1846.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has sustained the action of a lower court in awarding $10,000 to a little girl against the Boston Ice Company for the loss of one of her feet as the result of a cake of ice falling upon it from a cart as she was crossing a street in company with her five-year-old sister, the injured child at the time lacking two months of being three years old.

The American demand for diamonds and precious stones has grown remarkably in the last few years. It is one of the signs of fat pocketbooks. In the year just closed the imports of diamonds and precious stones at the port of New York reached the enormous figure of $20,000,000. In the calendar year 1896 the imports were $7,535,000, in 1897 they were $7,670,000, while last year the total was $13,031,000.

Caviar is made from sturgeon eggs, salted in brine. It is the most costly product of the fisheries of this country, and while largely relished by epicures, a taste for it must usually be acquired. Until recently its manufacture was monopolized by the Russians, most of it being prepared on the Volga River and Caspian Sea, and at the present time about 8,000,000 pounds of it is exported annually from the dominions of the Czar.

Among the largest spans of the arched type of bridge construction are the spandril-braced structure at Niagara, of 350 feet; that of Garabit, India, of 540 feet; the Lisbon (Portugal) Douro bridge, of 528 feet; the St. Louis, of 520 feet; the Grunnenthal (Germany), of 512 feet; and the Harlem, of 510 feet. An arched railway bridge has recently been erected at Mungsten, in Germany, which has a span of 560 feet, thus being now the largest span of the arched-bridge type in the world.

"And now that you are through college, what are you going to do?" asked a friend of the youthful graduate.

"I shall study medicine," was the grave reply of the ambitious young man.

"But isn't that profession already overcrowded?" asked the friend.

"Possibly it is," answered the knowing youth, "but I propose to study medicine just the same, and those who are already in the profession will have to take their chances."

"No," replied the young man. "I belong in the melanoeste picipes class."

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed, "What's that?"

"That," he hastened to explain, with the aid of a practical illustration, "is the scientific name of the kissing bug."

If the Prince of Wales were not resolute, unflinchingly energetic, and the essence of punctuality, he could not possibly get through all he does every day of his life. He is an early riser, though he goes to bed very late, and even should daylight find him still busy with his arrears of private correspondence he will be ready to get up when called at 8 o'clock. Practically the only time his Royal Highness has to himself is before the simple breakfast, of which he partakes alone about 9 o'clock, and the short time he has to snatch from public affairs after that meal. A breath of fresh morning air in the pretty grounds of Marlborough House braces him to face the enormous piles of letters that await his attention after the first meal.

Miss Lockheart's LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 67,104]

"I cannot express my gratitude to you for the good that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I have taken five bottles of the Compound and two boxes of Liver Pills and feel better in every respect. I had suffered for years with dropsy; the veins in my limbs burst, caused from the pressure of the water. I had the worst kind of kidney trouble, fainting spells, and I could not stand long at a time. I also had female weakness and the doctor said there was a tumor in my left side. The pains I had to stand were something dreadful. A friend handed me a little book of yours, so I got your medicine and it has saved my life. I felt better from the first bottle. The bloating and the tumors have all gone and I do not suffer any pain. I am still using the Vegetable Compound and hope others may find relief as I have done from its use."—MISS N. J. LOCKHEART, BOX 16, ELIZABETH, PA.

Only the women who have suffered with female troubles can fully appreciate the gratitude of those who have been restored to health.

Worth More than Their Weight.

Several brides have been presented with marriage portions far exceeding their weight in gold. The average weight of a bride will not exceed 130 pounds, or 2,080 ounces, and this at $20 per ounce is $41,600. Miss Margot Tennant's marriage portion of $15,000 a year was more than twelve times her weight in gold, while the marriage portion of Miss Mackay (now the Princess of Colonna) of $2,500,000 was more than 300 times her weight in gold.

But an experience with these is almost always disappointing. Either it becomes necessary to keep increasing the dose or they become entirely inactive. Not so with DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN. Its efficacy keeps up and those who give it a fair and honest trial find that it is always a friend. 10c, 50c and $1 sizes of Davenport the Druggist.

WOMEN IN TROUBLE.

The Approach of Motherhood is the Occasion of Much Anxiety to All.

Every woman dreads the ordeal through which she must pass in becoming a mother. The pain and suffering which is in store for her is a source of constant anxiety, fear and dread, to say nothing of the danger which the coming incident entails. The joyous anticipations with which she looks forward to baby's coming gives way to an indescribable dread of the ordeal when she fully realizes the critical and trying event which will soon approach and have to be endured.

Women should hail with delight a remedy which insures to them immunity from the pain, suffering and danger incidental to child-bearing. Such a remedy is now offered, and women need not fear longer the hour of childbirth. "Mother's Friend"—is a scientific liniment—and if used before confinement, gently and surely prepares the body for the great requirements and changes it is undergoing, insures safety to both mother and child, and takes her through the event with comparative ease and comfort. This wonderful remedy is praised by every woman who has used it.

What woman is not interested in "Mother's Friend?" This wonderful remedy has been tested and its priceless value proven by the experience of thousands of happy mothers who have used it during the most critical period of woman's life—the approach and culmination of motherhood.

It has won their everlasting praise, for it gave them help and hope in their most trying hour and when most needed. Every woman may some day need "Mother's Friend." The little book, "Before Baby is Born," telling all about it, and when it should be used, will prove of great interest and benefit to all expectant mothers, and will be sent free to any address upon application to the Bradfield Regulator Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Brown-Weimer Wedding.

At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Weimer, northeast of Auburn, last evening, occurred a very pretty home wedding, the contracting parties being their daughter, Marguerite May, and Herman L. Brown. Promptly at eight o'clock the couple attended by Mr. Dean Metcalf as groomsmen and Miss Gladys Fitch as bridesmaid, took their places in the parlor to the strains of a beautiful wedding march by Miss Maud Link and in the presence of the invited guests, about seventy-five in number, were joined in the holy bonds in an impressive service conducted by Rev. T. E. Lancaster of Columbia City. The ceremony and congratulations over, the company sat down to a fine supper in two courses which all agreed was a triumph of culinary skill. Mr and Mrs. Brown were the recipients of a large number of useful and valuable presents, such as will not only come into acceptable use in their everyday life but will also serve as pleasant remembrances from their relatives and friednds. For this auspicious occasion the groom was dressed in the conventional black, and the bride was lovely in an attire of pure white. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers and smilax.

It is perhaps not necessary for us to extol the excellent qualities of the bride and groom, both of whom are too well known to need an introduction. Mr. Brown is a successful teacher and an excellent young man, while in Miss Weimer, who was a graduate of the class of 1899 of the Auburn high school and an estimable young lady, he has secured a wife in every way worthy of his love and protection. They have taken up their residence in the Frank Eckhart property. In closing, the COURIER again offers sincere congratulations and joins their many friends in the wish that their wedded life may be long, happy and prosperous.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D. Williams, of Manchester, Mich., tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by H. B. McCord the Druggist.

The Leas Reunion.

(Waterloo Dawn, August 31)

The Leas family reunion was held last Sunday at the old homestead north of town now owned by Obe Leas. There were big Leases, little Leases, fat Leases, lean Leases, good looking Leases and homely Leases like Hez and Will. There were all kinds and just sixty-two hungry Leases. The table was set out under the trees of the old orchard and full justice was done to the good things. The following is a list of those present:

Congressman Botkin's Statement

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 1, 1898.
Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.
MY DEAR DOCTOR:—It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines:

Hon. J. D. BOTKIN,
Congressman-at-Large from Kansas.

Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin. I have been afflicted, more or less, for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation; a residence in Washington has increased these troubles.

A few bottles of your medicines have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of their use will effect a permanent cure.

Pe-ru-na is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections.

J. D. BOTKIN.

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang ye, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER VI.

The hot weather of the past week has driven an unusual number of people, to gather at the Band Stand, for there is generally a breeze and the shade is always inviting in a hot day. This, also, brought out a few new names, which the secretary at once enrolled in the little pass book that contains the constitution and bylaws.

The Story-Teller was "on deck" for the first time in several weeks and when the little joke played on El. McGrath was mentioned it brought to his mind the following story of a quick-witted Irishman, told him by Mr. McGrath.

One Sunday a young Catholic priest took for his subject the parable of the loaves and fishes and in relating the miracle performed said that the Savior had fed five men with five thousand loaves and two fishes. Sitting in the front pew was Pat Murphy, and when reverend father made his strange statement Pat muttered, not unheard by the priest, "Shure, anybody could do that," The following Sunday the the shepherd of his flock thought to "square himself" by giving a correct version of the miracle and after he had stated five thousand men were fed with five loaves and two fishes, turned to his devout parishioner, who again occupied his front seat, and said: "Now Pat, do you think you could do that?" asked the priest. "I could, your riverence." "And how?" "Shure and I'd use what was left over from last Sunday." Irish wit had again triumphed and no more was said about the loaves and fishes.

They took a square laugh at this Irish story, and the Lounger began to laugh. And the more he laughed, the funnier it seemed to strike him.

"I was lounging about the Swineford House the other day" said he, by way of explaining what tickled him, "when a funny thing occurred. Everyone has heard that this big hotel is not yet as great as its popularity, and much more room is needed. So there will be a general re-arrangement and many improvements made.

Among the improvements will be a three-story brick addition to join the present dining room on the south, the first story to be used as a sample room. A new kitchen will be built and ever so many other things fixed up. Well, all this will be a bother to the business of the hotel, for that business must go right on. Guests will come and go, and must be fed and sheltered, and they must be made comfortable, and things made as pleasant for them as possible But how is it to be done, with all this tearing up and confusion? Where would they eleep and eat, and where could the cooking be done, when the kitchen is to be abandoned to fix a new one? These things were hard to settle, and they were what bothered George Swineford and finally got him into trouble. He worried most over the kitchen. But finally he thought of the present sample room. Here was an idea. Why not take that for a kitchen while the other was being changed into something else? It was just the thing. But just then it occurred to him that the kitchen range would have to be taken through the door, and he doubted if it would go through. However, as soon as he had a spare moment, he would measure and see. Just then it happened some big sample trunks had to be taken out of the sample room and across the office to the north sidewalk where they are loaded for the trains. No one else being in sight, George took the job. Shortly afterwards, his wife saw him at the water closet about two hundred feet back of the sample room, trying to get a three-hundred pound sample trunk through the closet door. "George, say, George, what on earth are you trying to do?" called his wife in alarm. "Trying to see if the range will go through the sample room door," said George, wiping big drops of sweat from his face. "But that isn't the sample room, and that big trunk isn't the range" answered his wife, now fully convinced that George was going crazy. George looked at the big trunk, then at the little door, and it all came on him like a flash. Sadly, he pulled the heavy trunk back to the hallway, then across the office and out onto the platform. And when the drayman came to take them away, George was sitting in the office, his face benignly calm, and he was reading the Daily COURIER.

The Curfew.

The curfew ordinance is coming more and more into favor as an aid to public morality and good citizenship. It provides that boys and girls under fifteen years of age shall be in their homes at a specified hour each night. Reports from those cities that have adopted the ordinance testify to the beneficial results of the law wherever carried into execution, a decrease of seventy-five percent in youthful criminals being the best demonstration of its wisdom.

Large deposits of gilsonite have been found along the white River in Utah. There is also a sort of limestone, that is rich in asphaltum, very much as the gilsonite is. Both are valuable, the gilsonite being used to cover the bottom of ships to keep sea worms from boring them, and the stone is used for pavements.

The First Nebraska regiment reached home yesterday morning, landing from their train at Omaha. They left for Manila fifteen months ago and have seen much hard fighting. Their commander, Col. Complaints have been made to the pension bureau in regard to the stoppage of pensions of those who enlisted or accepted commissions in the war with Spain. These pensions ceased by operation of law, and not by any order or instructions from the bureau.

There is a move on foot to have the pension laws re-modeled and rendered more plain and simple. It is proposed to establish a commission to go over all the various laws that have been enacted from time to time, and see if they cannot be all combined into one new law, and so save a great deal of delay and some mistakes. The idea is an excellent one.

General Lawton's course in extending muncipal government in the Philippines is explained in detail in Manila newspapers just received at the war department. They state that the general has made a tour of many towns along the line of his division, including Santa Anna, Pandacan and San Felipe, and has established is each a complete system of civil government. The inhabitants of the towns are to have entire charge of affairs, according to General Lawton's system. The general called before him the principal men of the towns, and after pointing out the general purposes and desires of the American government, had these natives designate a mayor, vice mayor, and head men for the several wards. General Lawton explained to the inhabitants that the United States government did not wish to meddle at all with the local affairs of the people, and they were told to proceed with tax levies, to start schools and public improvements, and to establish such civil offices as they saw fit.

The people were told that the tax money was to be expended at home and note of it was to be contributed to the general government. General Lawton also established the first civil government at Balauag, Senor Guerero being installed as captain general. Local governments also have been put in force at Bacoor, Paranac and Las Pinas.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

Indiana W. C. T. U. Convention, Marion, October 6 to 10.

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., November 20 27.

The birth of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—Daughter of the Crusade and child of God—was the marshaling upon earth's great arena of a host of fresh battalions of the army of the living God. It was the arrival of a mighty reserve corps upon upon a hard-fought field and if she has not driven her enemy at every point and planted her pure white banner in victory upon every field, it was because she was hurried into battle unequipped and compelled from an open field to fight the fiercest of foes, intrenched in law, flanked by revenue, protected by the strong arm of government, backed by greed and lust and vice and all the basest passions of mankind.

And what has the Woman's Christian Temperance Union done? She has gone into all the highways and byways of the world preaching freedom for the captive and salvation for the people by the abolition of the traffic in strong drink. She has collided with priestly prejudice in political partisanship; but unmoved by the shock and undeterred by the tumult, she has distanced every competitor on the highway of reform. While some have eyed her with jealous gaze and from imaginary heights have rolled shadowy boulders upon her track, she has unaffrighted, kept in the even tenor of her way, preaching the right of eternal Right and the sublime unselfishness of the temperance that "if meat make my brother to offend" will "eat no meat while the earth stands." True to her God-given mission the Woman's Christian Temperance Union stands like a John the Baptist, rugged, fearless, purposeful, proclaiming the one message: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking six bottles, found herself sound and well; now does her own housework, and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Only 50 cents and $1.00, every bottle guaranteed.

Added Fifteen Per Cent.

The State Board of Tax Review at Indianapolis has added fifteen per cent to the assessed value of the property of DeKalb county. To us, this looks like an injustice, for it will simply raise the taxes of every taxpayer in the county just that much. It will also make the auditor a vast amount of extra work. A part of the books are already made out, and now he will have to go over every one, and erase the figures already made, and write in a new set. And all through the list of taxpayers of the county, he will have to take each man's assessment, get fifteen per cent of it and add that to the original amount. The new laws in general, have fallen heavily on the auditor by adding greatly to his labor and not adding to his salary. We suppose the increase was made necessary by the great reduction in the sum total of DeKalb county's taxables, by taking out the indebtedness of such as the new law gave that privilege. And here again, indirectly, is an injustice. The man whose taxes are lessened by taking out his debts, gets a reduction that properly is his by right, but now comes the State Board, and makes all the rest of the taxpayers turn in and pay enough more to make up all that the one man has gained. Had the State Board let our assessment alone, the relief that properly came to the man who owed a part of his assessment would not be saddled onto his innocent neighbor. It looks as if we are being governed too much. The authorities are taking too good care of us.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

NEXT YEAR'S POLITICAL ISSUE.

The New York Sun is very anxious that the Democratic party shall go into the Presidential contest next year with the money question as the principal, and practically the only, issue. It thinks that if this is done the Republicans can win as easily as they did in 1896, when, by means of enormous misrepresentation and a huge campaign fund contributed by the trusts and monopolies, they managed to elect McKinley by a plurality of 600,000 in a total vote of nearly 14,000,000.

Our contemporary will not admit that the failure of the Republican party to undertake reformatory currency legislation has induced the great majority of the gold Democrats to return to their former party associations, and by closing its eyes to this patent fact it sees another triumph of the syndicates and the national banks ahead, if only the trusts and imperial expansion and the attendant deification of militarism can be kept in the background during the campaign that is to be waged a year hence.

Careful observers of the political situation to-day who do not try to deceive themselves believe that if the election were held next month, with the money question as the principal issue and with McKinley as the Republican candidate for the Presidency and the Democracy led again by William J. Bryan, the latter would win by as large a plurality as Hanna managed to get for his man three years ago.

The truth is that the American people cannot be scared by the same false cry in two successive Presidential elections. The misrepresentation of the Democratic position on the money question that the Republicans indulged in during the campaign of 1896 will fall very flat on the ears of the voters next year, if repeated.

The voters do not want old straw threshed over again by the stump orators. They want an intelligent discussion of new issues as they arise, and the party which undertakes to look backward instead of forward is sure to rue it. The monetary system of the country, it is true, still needs reforming, but the Republican party will not undertake the task, and the only hope of having the work done properly rests in the return of the Democratic party to power; and the Democratic party cannot be kept out of power by the reiteration of the untruths that were used in 1896 or any other year.—New York News.

Good and Bad Trusts.

It is vain for the defenders of trusts to deny that certain evils result from the forming of these gigantic business monopolies. Recognizing this fact, these trust defenders have originated the idea that there are good and bad trusts. Having created this theory, they demand that those who are opposed to trusts shall name the bad ones.

William J. Bryan, after showing that the Republican party defends and fosters trusts, says: "Now, I don't know exactly how they are going to discern between the good trusts and the bad trusts, but I take it that the good trusts will be the ones that contribute the largest amounts to the Republican campaign funds."

With this view of the question the plain people will be disposed to consider the good trusts quite as harmful as the bad, indeed, the very purposes which a trust is formed to carry out condemn it as unmitigatedly bad. Why are trusts formed? In the first place, to reduce expenses of conducting business; to get more work done for less pay; to accomplish greater results with less labor. In the second place, to kill competition. Having accomplished these two things, the trust is ready to grasp a third benefit for itself, and that is the raising of prices and the increased taxing of the consumer.

These are the objects of all trusts. Which of them can, then, be said to be good? As a matter of fact, every trust is a monopoly. Some are not so powerful as others. In that respect they may be said to be less evil, but not one of them possesses the positive quality of being good. Absolutely it may be declared, therefore, that there are no good trusts. The principles upon which these combines are founded are wrong and nothing but evil for the people can flow from them.

That German Vote.

Whistling to keep their courage up, the Republican managers are announcing that "the German vote is all right." True, the German vote is all right, but not in the sense that our Republican friends imply.

But the New York Independent, which is not independent at all, so far as its political belief is concerned, but is rampantly Republican, sees danger to the party in the disaffection from or of the German vote. Imperialism has no claims for the German-American citizen, and he knows too much about its workings in the fatherland to approve of its importation to the United States. He does not approve of the Philippine war, nor does he like the attempts of administration advocates to establish a great standing army.

Undoubtedly there will be a large exodus of thoughtful German voters from the Republican party in the campaign of 1900. Promises are never made good by the Republican machine politicians, and the German voters are getting tired of those who make pledges only to break them. However much the thick and thin Republican press may protest that "the German vote is all right," the fact remains that the German press of this country almost unanimously oppose the war and denounce unstintingly the doctrine of imperialism. Truly the German vote is all right, but not from a McKinley point of view.

The Silver Question.

Naturally enough, the Republican editors are deeply exercised over the silver question. They know that there are gold Democrats who were assistant Republicans in 1896, and they are anxious to keep open the split in the Democracy and secure the aid of the gold faction. With this object in view, they are busy declaring that the regular Democracy has "abandoned silver," hoping by this means to arouse the pugnacity of the silver Democrats and cause them to antagonize the faction which went over to McKinley.

It is true that the regular Democracy desire to harmonize differences in the party, but it is not true that it is prepared to abandon principles to secure this end. This fact has been demonstrated by the action of the Iowa State Democratic convention, which reaffirmed the Chicago platform and renominated the man for Governor who ran in 1896.

In discussing the impending issues William J. Bryan truly and eloquently said, during the delivery of a speech at Des Moines: "We do not need to surrender a single syllable or idea of the Chicago platform. Like the inaugural speech of Thomas Jefferson, it was made for all time. But when new and important issues come up, we can take them into the family and fight on them without apologizing for any previous fight we have made. When the Democratic party has once come into power and Democratic principles have been tried, the Republican party will dissolve and be lost forever."

These assertions are not in the least ambiguous, but Republican newspapers have attempted to distort them into a retraction of belief in the doctrine of bimetallism. There is no such retraction, and the Chicago platform will stand unrepealed in any of its clauses, but enlarged to embrace the new issues which will come before the people in 1900.—Chicago Democrat.

An Example for Other States.

The Iowa platform is one upon which all Iowa Democrats can stand. It reaffirms the national platform of 1896, as is entirely proper, seeing that that instrument constitutes the party creed until the national convention of 1900 frames a new one. It also deals with the new issues—imperialism, militarism and trusts—which undoubtedly will constitute the fighting ground in the Presidential campaign. The platform, like the ticket, is Democratic and will receive the indorsement of all Democrats. Iowa has shown the way to the Democracy of sister commonwealths. With similar mutual forbearance, consideration and resulting harmony the national Democracy can next year advance against the common enemy with that confidence of victory which results from united allegiance to the principles laid down by Thomas Jefferson.—Chicago Chronicle.

An Ideal Platform.

The platform adopted by the Democratic convention at Des Moines, Iowa will be read with unalloyed pleasure by Michigan Democrats. It is throughout a thoroughly Democratic document. It does not indulge in glittering generalities or meaningless catch phrases. It reaffirms the Chicago platform and takes up the new issues along thoroughly Democratic lines, and in language that cannot be misapprehended by any one. Its objections to the proposed Anglo-American alliance are forcible, and its arrangement of the present administration admirable. Iowa, while not a pivotal State, is more nearly a typical State than Kentucky or Ohio, and the result of the campaign this fall, with a strong platform and a strong ticket, will be watched for with great interest.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Rises to New Conditions.

There is absolutely nothing in what Mr. Bryan is quoted as saying that will not be heartily indorsed by every good Democrat. Instead of its being a shelving or desertion of the silver issue, it is anything but that. It means no weakening in support of the Chicago platform, nor the abandonment of a single principle. It is nothing else than a sensible understanding of political conditions as they exist, recognition of which Mr. Bryan has given in many previous speeches; not in exactly the same language, perhaps, but in substance. There is not one man in America—that is, no man of any intelligence whatsoever—that does not understand exactly where Mr. Bryan stands on the currency question and every other issue.—Atlanta Constitution.

Empire of Democracy.

The issue is forming; every day of continued aggression against a people struggling to be free, every shot fired in a war that is a desecration of the principles and traditions hallowed in our own war for independence, brings it nearer. When the American people pass judgment on this issue they decide whether Democracy is dream or substance—take their stand for empire and the divine right of kings on the one hand, or for free republic and equality on the other.—Omaha World-Herald.

Every Day Strengthens Bryan.

Mr. Bryan has made Democratic success possible, if not probable, by his declaration at Des Moines. He has opened the way for a complete Democratic reunion, and he has made it easy for his party to take the offensive on a dozen bitter and formidable accounts.—Washington Post.

For Symmetry.

Lord Selkirk had a formal garden—an Italian garden, as it is called—and his gardener was very proud of it.

One day, says the Golden Penny, Lord Selkirk found a boy shut up in the summer-house at the end of the terrace at St. Mary's Isle, and was informed by his gardener that it was for stealing apples. On reaching the other end of the terrace, where there was another summer-house, Selkirk beheld the gardener's son looking dolefully out of the window.

"Eh, John, what's this? Has your boy been stealing, too?"

"Na, na, my lord," was the answer. "I just put him in for semetry."

WAR WITH YAQUIS.

SERIOUS REVOLT OF INDIANS IN MEXICO.

Yaquis Have Been Fighting for Independence Since 1735—Mexico Is to Blame for Insurrection—Something of the Picturesque Yaqui Country.

The insurrection of the Yaqui Indians promises to give the Mexican government another prolonged war. It has been but two years since the last uprising of the Yaquis was put down, after nearly fourteen years of fighting, and the rebellion now on has all indications of preparedness. Contrary to statements made that the Yaquis would not molest the American residents in Sonora—the Yaqui country—there have already been slain a number of American gold prospectors. Indeed, it has developed that one of the causes of the uprising was the fact that the government permitted Americans to come into Sonora and dig gold. The Yaquis claim to hold the Sonora country by right of occupation for centuries back and by confirmation of title by the King of Spain long before the Mexican government was thought of.

SCENE OF THE PRESENT YAQUI INDIAN UPRISING.

When Mexico revolted and established her independence the Yaquis refused to recognize the new government and proclaimed their own independence and autonomy. Since then the effort to obtain from them recognition of the authority and law of Mexico has led to frequent collisions between them and the government troops; pitched battles have been fought and though generally beaten by superior forces and forced to retreat for the time, they have never yet been subdued. Already in the insurrection now on the Yaquis have routed forces of Mexican soldiers sent against them, and the government is mobilizing a large army to pit against the wily warriors. The Yaquis' method of fighting is one taught them by nature and experience. When beaten they retreat into the almost inaccessible fastnesses of the Sierra Madres, whither the government troops dare not follow them, and there await the departure of the troops, when they again descend and clear out the people who have established themselves on their lands. Though the population of the Yaqui country does not exceed 15,000, the male portion combine to make a formidable foe, and the Mexican government anticipates a war of six months or more.

YAQUI INDIAN GIRL.

Story of the Yaquis.

The Indians inhabit the valley of Sonora. They are good agriculturists when allowed to till their farms in peace, and their valley being rich and fertile has tempted covetous men with little regard for right to take advantage of the peculiar features of the Mexican laws in regard to taking up land and filing claims on the Yaqui holdings. These, of course, understanding little of law and moved by a sense of injustice, have resisted the seizure, and troops have been called out to enforce the law—that is, put the new claimant in possession of the Yaqui land taken under the law. The Yaquis have stood together and made good fights after their fashion, and when compelled to do so retired, only to return when the troops were withdrawn to take forcible possession of their own again. In former insurrections they had but few firearms, but when the Sonora railroad to Guaymas was built they furnished a large proportion of the laborers, and with the money earned Winchester rifles were purchased, with which they have been much more formidable antagonists than before and are more conscious of their own strength.

If the war is continued until the Yaquis are pacified or exterminated dire disaster is sure to befall that beautiful State. The extermination of the Yaqui Indians simply means the destruction of the manual labor in Sonora. The Yaquis are not only the best and most trusted workers in Sonora, but they constitute the largest number of able workingmen in that State. The Yaquis can in no way be compared with the Indians of the western part of United States, except, perhaps, the Cherokees and a few other tribes known for their peacefulness and for their love of application to agriculture. Since the very first settlement of Sonora by the Spaniards the Yaquis have inhabited a small triangular territory situated in the delta of the Yaqui River and extending from the Gulf to a place inland called Buena Vista. A few Yaquis are settled as far up as Comurifa, but the principal Yaqui country is as just stated further down the coast. In this territory the Yaquis were found by the Spaniards, and their tradition is that here they have resided from immemorial times. For centuries the Mexican government acknowledged the right of the Yaquis to live in and to cultivate this territory and for centuries the Yaquis remained peacefully at their work of cultivating the soil and as general laborers elsewhere. Within their territory the Yaquis have even now retained an independent government, with chiefs to decide according to their laws and to mete out punishment to the guilty, and so perfect has been their method of self-government that the Mexican government has had no occasion to interfere. The Yaqui is by nature moral and industrious and no complaint can be made against him on that account. All over Sonora there are found Yaquis in time of peace working in the fields and in the mines and even as laborers on the railroads. In the latter capacity they are more valued and more trusted than any Mexicans, and we know of instances where railroad agents have preferred Yaqui section bosses to those of other nationalities.

Don't Want Land Divided.

As a laborer the Yaqui is hard-working and faithful and can always be relied on. He does not shirk his work when his foreman turns his back and he does not shorten his day's work by continued cigarette smoking. No wonder, therefore, that he is highly valued for the work he can and does perform. As do many other laborers, he gets drunk when pay comes on Saturday evening but he confines his carousing to the rancheria in which he lives and keeps his family and when Monday morning comes around every man is at his work. The Yaqui country from Buena Vista to the gulf has always been held as common property by the Yaquis as a tribe and has never been portioned out to individuals as in other communities. The reason for this is found in the nature of the territory itself. The fertility of the Yaqui delta depends entirely upon the overflow of the Yaqui River. In times of heavy rains the delta and adjacent river bottom lands are covered by water or made moist by sub-irrigation, while in dry seasons the contrary is the cause. As the territory is large, each individual Yaqui can always find a place suitable for cultivation for that particular season. Next season he may have to find moisture and other conditions necessary. Now it is evident that if the land were not held in common and if every Yaqui had his own allotted piece some would possess suitable land for cultivation, while others would have dry lands, which would be worthless unless properly irrigated. Much of the present trouble with the Yaquis arises from this fact. The Mexican government wants the Yaquis to divide their land so that every individual may possess his own plot.

CAMP SCENE IN THE YAQUI COUNTRY.

They Take to the Mountains.

Colonel Martinez of the Mexican army, in an interview on the Yaqui insurrection, says: "The Indians have been restless for some months past. They object to American prospectors invading the mountains of their country in quest of gold. We were expecting an outbreak and were not unprepared. If we can cut off the Indians before they reach their strongholds, our work will be easy enough, but once in the mountains, conquest of the insurgents will be a difficult problem. That was the trouble during the ten years' war which ended two years ago, and cost Mexico much blood and treasure. The Indians retreated to the mountains, where they could not be pursued, and at every favorable opportunity swooped down upon the troops or assailed neighboring villages, murdering and plundering. If the Indians do not surrender a war of extermination will ensue. It is a pity, too, for General Diaz had hopes the Indians would remain friendly, and become civilized. Not long ago he sent thirty school teachers into their country to instruct them and to establish schools and colleges. These may have been murdered for all that is known, for some of them went into the outlying districts. So far as I can learn, the Indians are well armed. They have, in fact, been buying weapons ever since their leaders signed the treaty of peace, and I do not believe they ever had any idea of keeping the truce. The murder of their own chiefs who had accepted office under the Mexican government indicates that they have grown desperate and that the contest will be fierce." The tactics of the Yaquis are to attack suddenly and to ambush and immediately after the assault to run back into the mountains, where no one can follow them. After a Yaqui has fought for some time he suddenly becomes a peaceful Indian and leaves the territory in which the war rages. This happens when his ammunition is all spent; he must then provide himself with more. This he does by working in Arizona and New Mexico, as in these places he can procure arms with his savings and return when he has enough. When he has accumulated enough he returns by passing from Arizona through the Sierra Madre wilderness, where he is free from soldiers' bullets and from observing eyes, and when least expected he turns up fully equipped with munitions to carry on the war. The Yaqui is not the blood-thirsty beast that some reports have made him out to be. He is brave, industrious and peaceful; he does not torture his prisoners, but neither does he allow them to escape. In 1897 peace was made with the Yaquis. The government promised them a certain sum of money and they in turn agreed to have their land surveyed and partitioned. During the last two years the Yaquis have quietly been working in the mines of Sonora and Arizona and have saved their earnings in order to procure arms to renew the war. Whatever will be the outcome of the war, it will be a most ruinous one for Sonora. If the Yaquis are exterminated, as the reports tell us is the intention of General Torres, then the effect will soon be felt. It will mean the extermination of the manual labor in Sonora; it will mean the crippling of her wheat and mining industries. The Mexican government could well have afforded to allow the Yaquis to remain in possession of their land, as their value as laborers is many, many times greater than the price that can be realized by selling their land. Sonora is a country with immense resources, with enormous tracts of fertile soil where almost everything might be grown profitably. Such crops as wheat, sugarcane, beans, corn, oranges, dates, peaches, apricots and many other fruits are hardly surpassed anywhere.

Our Production of Copper.

The copper production of the United States in the year 1898 was the largest ever recorded in a single year, or a total of 535,900,232 pounds of fine copper, which was an increase over 1897 of 34,529,937 pounds, or 6.8 per cent. The exports for the year amounted to 299,705,054 pounds, or about 55 per cent. of the total production. During the current year the production has increased but very slightly, while the consumption has grown on a large scale, and an extraordinary increase in price has resulted.

Alcohol for Automobiles.

The majority of motor cars are now driven by petroleum, but a French engineer recommends the use of alcohol instead of it, and motors are being altered so as to consume it. There is no fear of explosion with alcohol, and it is said to be less costly than petroleum. We might therefore paraphrase the national poet, and say, "Put it in your cars to save your legs."

"Dead" Languages.

There are certain languages which although they are still spoken and written in, are to all intents and purposes dead. For instance, Icelandic is practically identical with the dead Norse language, out of which the Scandinavian tongues have grown. So, too, Provencal, the ancient language of Provence, and the speech in which the Troubadours sang, has now sunk to the level of a patois, although a certain French literary school is making efforts to revive it as a literary language. Hebrew, again, though still spoken, is to all intents and purposes dead in the sense that Greek and Latin are. Cornish, Manx and the old mysterious Roumany tongue are also examples which should be mentioned in this connection.

The Paths of Destiny.

Go your own way; let me go mine:
For us the differing day-stars shine
Across the shifting water-way
That links to-day with yesterday
And kisses with regretful lips
The sands and the departing ships,
Whose top-masts, sinking in the sea,
Return no more to you and me.

Go your own way; each has his own
For us the differing day-stars shone
Above the hills that hurry down
The valley from the inland town,
Where boyhood's changeful vows were traced
In drifting sand, thus here effaced.

Go your way; let each man's soul
Maintain its purpose and its goal.
The times are dead that called us friends;
Our lives have different aims and ends.
Careers which satisfy like thine
Were never made for hearts like mine
That ache, that break, yet still afar
Pursue fame's fair, elusive star,
Until, beyond the realms of night,
Toil rises, star-like, avatar.
A god incarnate from each line
Where pain makes human thought divine.

Across the hollow-sounding lakes
Whose low, recurrent thunder shakes
The sand whereon our pathways part—
Mine to the height, yours to her heart—
For us the differing day-stars shine:
Go your own way; let me go mine.

A BRIDE BY TELEGRAM.

By Mrs. Whitney.

"Send me down bride in full dress for Friday evening. H. Smith, Walkley Station."

That was the tenor of the telegram, Miss Betsey Blythe knew, because she read it over forty times, if she read it once. She picked it up on the step of the telegraph office, where the lucky recipient thereof must have dropped it—and, unluckily, the address was torn off the northeast corner of the folded paper.

But Miss Betsey Blythe had not been engaged in looking after her neighbors' business all her life to be foiled now. She wiped the street mud off the telegram with her pocket-handkerchief, put it safely into her reticule and carried it home to her sisters, Miss Arethusa and Miss Pamela Blythe.

"There," she said, "didn't I tell you Harold Smith was going to be married on the sly."

"Goodness me!" said Arethusa.

"It can't be possible," piped Pamela. "But who can the bride be?"

"That's the question," declared Miss Betsey, staring back at the poll-parrot's cage in the window. "And Friday is to be the wedding day."

"Which Friday, I wonder?" said Miss Arethusa.

"Why, this Friday, of course!" pronounced Miss Pamela. "The day after to-morrow, of course; or it would have been a deal easier and cheaper to write instead of telegraphing. Don't you see?"

"Friday's an unlucky day for a wedding," groaned Miss Betsey.

"Just like Harold Smith to get married on a Friday," said Miss Pamela. "He's always making fun of what he calls 'superstitious observances.'"

"Well, I never!" said Miss Arethusa. "Who is the bride, anyhow?"

"If she's a girl of any spirit whatever," tartly observed Miss Betsey, "she won't allow herself to be telegraphed around the country like a package of dry goods."

"Some girls will do anything to get married," said Arethusa, with vicious emphasis.

"It's Jessie Mordaunt, of course," decided Pamela. "She's been flirting on and off with Harold Smith for these three years, but I didn't suppose he was foolish enough to fall into her trap!"

"Or perhaps it's Marian Shelton," added Miss Betsey. "I know they've been making up a new white silk dress with tablier fronts and a trained skirt at Shelton's. Miss Needlepoint told me so herself. And I can believe any amount of folly of the Shelton family since they changed that girl's name from Mary Ann to Marian."

"There's the three Misses MacKenzie, every one of 'em crazy," suggested Miss Arethusa.

"No," said Miss Pamela, decidedly. "You may be quite certain it's Jessie! Jessie's flighty enough for anything! I think she'd rather enjoy an escapade like that!"

"And I dare say," vindictively added Miss Arethusa, who was the eldest sister of the three, and the least addicted to favorable views of human nature, "they think it's an unfathomable secret!"

"Walkley Station is only three-quarters of an hour from New York," said Betsey. "Let's go to the wedding!"

"And," added Miss Pamela, in a chuckle, "let's notify all our friends to go!"

For the three Misses Blythe were not pleased that Harold Smith should presume to take so important a step as that of matrimony without their consent and advice. Hadn't they known him as a curly-headed lad before he ever went into college? Hadn't he played many a practical joke upon them, in his wild, rollicking way—and didn't they know perfectly well that he regarded them as three sour, ridiculous, disappointed old spinsters?

And now that they had come into possession of one of his choicest, dearest secrets, it was scarcely in human nature not to be revenged, fully and entirely.

"Do you suppose she'll go out in the cars?" asked Arethusa.

"In full dress! What nonsense," retorted Pamela. "She'll drive, of course, in a carriage!"

"She'll get her death of cold," said Miss Betsey, with a shiver. "Driving fifteen miles in 'full dress!'"

"The idea of Harold Smith ordering her around in that majestic fashion!" cried Arethusa. "But, girls, I'll tell you what we will do; we'll go and call on the Mordaunts."

Mrs. Mordaunt, a pretty, full-blown rose style of matron, was doing crewelwork. Jessie, her daughter, who corresponded with the rosebud in the family, was painting a vase of purple pansies in watercolors. They did not appear in the least like custodians of an important secret; looked surprised when Miss Betsey alluded to the subject of impending marriages, and said they had heard of no wedding in the neighborhood; and they stared when Miss Arethusa asked if they hadn't had a dressmaker in the house lately.

"We always do our own sewing," said Mrs. Mordaunt. "Jessie can fit a dress as well as Madam Moudini herself."

"But for such a very, very important occasion as this," smirked Miss Arethusa.

"We never have any important occasions," laughed Jessie. "Look, Miss Blythe; do you think my pansy is as deep a purple as the original?"

And when the three old maids had at last taken their departure, Jessie looked at her mother in amazement, mingled with mirth.

"Mamma," said she, "what do those old women mean?"

"I think, dear," said Mrs. Mordaunt, "that they are the least bit unsettled in their minds—just a little crazy, you know."

And the Misses Blythe went away, exchanging mysterious glances and whispering to each other,—

"They cannot deceive us!"

The Misses Blythe told everybody they could think of—anyways in strict confidence, of course. Everybody repeated it to everybody else, and by Friday evening the train to Walkley Station was full.

To Miss Betsey Blythe's infinite disappointment, the Smith house, a pretty, old-fashioned mansion with a pillared front, a garden full of clipped box monstrosities, was not lighted up after any extraordinary fashion. Mrs. Smith, Harold's mother, a dimpled old lady in a white lace cap and gleaming gold spectacle-glasses, was knitting, half asleep, when the three Misses Blythe were ushered in, followed by a crowd of other acquaintances.

"Oh," said she, rubbing her eyes to make sure that it was not a dream, "this is a surprise party, is it? I'm sure I'm delighted to see you! Only it's a pity Harry isn't at home!"

"My good soul," said Miss Arethusa Blythe, shaking her finger, "it's no use trying to deceive us. We know all—about it!"

"All about what?" said Mrs. Smith.

"About the wedding!" cried out the company in chorus.

"Whose wedding?" demanded Mrs. Smith.

"Why, Harold's, to be sure!" they responded.

"But Harold isn't going to be married," said Mrs. Smith. "He isn't even engaged! Good gracious! What can have put such a thing into people's heads?"

"It's the telegram," said Miss Pamela.

"I don't know what you are talking about," said Mrs. Smith, in despair.

"Well, if you won't believe me, you will, perhaps, believe your own eyes," said Miss Betsey Blythe with dignity as she drew the telegram from her pocket, and carefully straightening out its creases, held it up before Mrs. Smith's spectacle glasses.

"Dear me!" cried Mrs. Smith, at last comprehending a little of this curious network of cross-purposes. "It's Bella Smith's big doll!"

"What!" cried Miss Arethusa, Miss Pamela, and Miss Betsey, in chorus.

"What!" more wildly echoed the rest of the assemblage, crowding eagerly around.

"Mrs. Helena Smith's little daughter, across the street," explained Mrs. Smith. "It's her birth-night party, and an immense doll dressed as a bride was forwarded by express this afternoon. I saw it myself—a perfect beauty, with veil and wreath, white satin boots, buttoned by knobs of pearl and long-wristed white kid gloves, entirely complete! And you thought—you really imagined that my Harold was going to be married secretly, and had telegraphed to New York for his bride!"

The old lady broke out into a fit of soft, sweet-sounding laughter, which shook her as if she had been a mould of jelly. Everybody else laughed, except the three Misses Blythe. They only looked blank.

"But, now that you're here," added hospitable Mrs. Smith, "you'll stay to tea, all of you? But you must! The down train don't leave until ten, and you'll be half starved now that there is no wedding feast for you. Oh, I insist upon your staying to tea."

The biggest teakettle in the house was put over to boil, at once; seven pounds of coffee were put into the pot, and the maids ran, one to the muffin-and-crumpet store and cake bakery, the other to the oyster stand, which, luckily, was not yet shut up for the night. And kind Mrs. Smith entertained her guests with fracious politeness.

But there was no wedding and no bride, except little Nelly Smith's wax bride across the street; and the three Misses Blythe went back to New York, sadder and wiser women.

And that was, perhaps, the most desirable result; they resolved to adhere thenceforth, to the eleventh commandment.

A Sleep-Walking Recruit's Dangerous Freak.

When somnambulists take to the use of firearms, people with their wits about them must needs be wide awake. About 11 o'clock on Tuesday night a recruit belonging to the Second Battalion, King's Shropshire Light Infantry, stationed at Victoria Barracks, Portsmouth, England, got out of bed and fired off a round of ball-cartridge in a crowded barrack-room, which was in darkness. When the lights were turned up the recruit was standing with the smoking rifle in his hand and apparently in a dazed condition. When arrested he stoutly maintained that he was asleep when he fired the rifle, and did not know what he was doing. Fortunately the rifle was directed upwards, and only the ceiling was damaged. The recruit will be tried for being in the unlawful possession of ball-cartridge. Ten rounds of ammunition were found lying near another block of buildings. They had evidently been thrown away by men who feared investigation in consequence of this affair. It is thought that the ammunition was brought back from Brown-down by the men who had been exercising in musketry there.

Precept and Practice.

"I have been very much pained," said the man who always has a regretful look in his eye, "to observe the American eagerness to make money."

"I understand that you have written a book on the subject."

"Yes. But I am not going to publish it—not until I can see some method of making it pay."—Washington Star.

THE BETROTHAL DAYS.

THE proper observance of the period of engagement is an important matter for those who would make life something really worth the living, because upon its spirit much of the future happiness or unhappiness of the betrothed pair will depend. Writing upon the subject recently, a careful observer says: "One of the most blissful periods of a girl's life are the days of her betrothal. When the momentous question has been asked and the engagement ring is upon her finger, it should be to each as the beginning of a new life. It is not right to wait until marriage follows before trying to learn all that is possible about each other. Many young people of both sexes consider the time of betrothal as one in which all sorts of mannerisms are to be shown off; they become flighty and put on airs and graces, and assume a dictatorial attitude that is not at all becoming to young people who expect to become one and row their own canoe. Each should strive earnestly to study the other's likes and dislikes, and in a reasonable measure to conform to peculiarities each may possess. It should ever be borne in mind that it is in very bad taste for either one of an engaged couple to assume an air of possession of the other in public places. While we try to point out the way for young people, we do not lay the blame altogether upon either one. If anything, it may be more often the girl who becomes tantalizingly uncontrollable during betrothal, but young men also exhibit a share of this weakness.—Good Housekeeping.

To Lace and Hook the Corset.

Every woman wears a corset, but few know how to put it on. The majority of women begin to hook it at the bottom, naturally throwing forward the hips and abdomen to hold the corset in place. Then, with much squeezing in of the waist, the second hook is fastened, and by the time the whole corset is on, the chest is low and hollow and the abdomen and hips are forward. Nearly all women lace their corsets when they first get them, and that one lacing does through all physical changes until the corset is thrown aside. This is a mistake. The laces should be loosened every day and the corset put on so that it is loose for the body. After it is hooked, then the laces should be tightened until the corset fits snugly.

In putting the corset on, the body should be kept in perfect position, with the chest high, abdomen in and hips back. This is a fundamental fact which almost every corset wearer forgets. The corset should be hooked from the top down, and then the laces should be tightened. A corset should have three laces. The first is at the top and extends down five or six holes. This lace should be left rather loose in order to give full play to the muscles of the chest and to allow good lung movement. The second lace goes down to about the waist line and this is the one that can be tightened if its wearer considers it necessary. The last and lowest lace should be left loose.

The Latest Beauty.

Londoners have named Miss Edith Jennings as the latest American beauty. The queen herself is said to have started the vogue by commenting on her perfect beauty. She is described as being a "brilliant brunette, divinely tall, has magnificent eyes, and her cheek is like a peach that has ripened on the southern wall." Miss Jennings was presented to the queen at her last drawing-room. The new belle is a sister of Mrs. Alfred Parish. Mr. Parish is a Philadelphian.

MISS JENNINGS.

Tall Women vs. Tall Men.

The tall girl differs from a man in not being proud of her height. She knows a little girl is more likely to be esteemed affectionate and loving by the men than is a tall girl. So she tries to get down to the loving level. Then, again, they know that the little girls have more chance of securing beaux, for the tall girl must restrict her hopes to the average size or tall men. Short men do not like to go out with girls several inches taller, and so fall back on the petite. So, where men are having their heels made extra high, girls and women are having theirs lowered. Hence, also the flat hat.

The New Young Man.

The old tradition that a man should cherish his wife, support her as something infinitely delicate and precious, shield her from the world, and regard her, not as a pleasant companion of the hunting field and smoking room, but as the being associated with the deepest and most enduring sentiment of his heart, has, of course, no significance for the new young man, and it is only just to say that the modern woman has given him every justification for his belief that she can push, trample and fight as successfully as the most insensitive male.

The sisters and mother of the new young man, if they happen to belong to the old order of women, are not to be congratulated. They will find themselves one day sighing for the old-time young man, with his chivalrous ideas about woman, and his stupid, unenlightened conviction of his own inferiority in most things except force, which he delighted to use for their benefit and admiration.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Romance of the Stage.

A romance within a romance was the marriage of Lydia Barry and George de Grasse, at Bath Beach. For some months past the two have been playing in a short sketch at the vaudeville theaters. In it De Grasse was made to propose to Miss Barry. One night he followed his proposal lines with a sotto voice, "I mean it. Will you?" Miss Barry's "Yes" had a double meaning when she answered. From this on the courtship was carried at a rapid rate and the "sincerity" of their acting brought applause repeatedly from the audience.

MISS BARRY.

Favor Female Doctors.

A young woman doctor estimates that London and the provinces contain no less than thirty-seven institutions officered wholly or partially by women doctors, and there are nearly 200 registered medical women who have been educated at the Handel Street School or the Royal Free Hospital in Gray's Inn road.

Miss Louisa Aldrich Blake of the New Hospital for Women is the first woman to hold the difficult degree of master of surgery of London University. The Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland four years ago conferred a fellowship on Miss Emily W. Dickson. In America no less than 4,500 women are practicing as doctors, and even conservative China is represented.

One or two women doctors in the United States are said to count their income in thousands, while it is reported that one in the West End of London earns $20,000 a year.—Philadelphia Record.

To Protect Rings.

Bold thieves have several times recently stopped women on the streets in New York and actually stolen the rings from their fingers. As a guard against further outrages of this kind some New York women, who own valuable rings, have adopted guards consisting of light gold chains running down the back of the hand, attached at one end to the rings and at the other to a heavy bracelet.

GUARDS FOR RINGS.

When to Rest.

All women, whether they be working women or women of leisure, should strive to obtain some portion of an hour in the afternoon to themselves when all cares may be laid aside and complete relaxation enjoyed in a recumbent position. If but ten minutes can be allowed, and that directly after the midday meal, it should be seized upon. It is a comparatively easy matter to contract the habit of napping, with the power of awakening at a certain time, directly after eating, and this short daytime rest will be of more benefit than an hour of sleep at night. The woman who can devote an hour to this luxury will keep young much longer than her less fortunate sister. It is not necessary that the hour should be spent in sleep, but it should be spent in a recumbent position with the mind free from household and social cares.

Shaking Hands.

An authority on etiquette says the desirable mode of shaking hands is to clasp our friend's hand firmly for one moment, with a scarcely perceptible shake, and no up-and-down movement, letting go at once. The etiquette of fashionable society pronounces handshaking while being introduced ill bred under ordinary circumstances.

"How long should a child sleep?" asked a mother of a nurse who was right up to the latest scientific mark, and she could not get a rule that applied to all children. This nurse hedged a bit by declaring that the healthy child who went to bed with the birds would want to get up with them, because his body, brain and nerves had all been thoroughly rested. In truth she did not believe in awakening a child, even if he slept later, for nature would care for him. Refusing to get up after he had wakened was another matter which came under the head of laziness and ought to be discouraged.

Of crying she said some sensible things, among which was this: A good cry that does not come from bodily pain, but is merely caused by disappointment or temper, and a woman of sense could distinguish the kind, would not hurt a healthy child, even though it worried the mother. Crying from pain or fright was another thing, which should be attended to.

THE BABY INCUBATOR.

Montreal Maternity Hospital Is Now Provided with One.

The Montreal Maternity Hospital is now ready to receive any babies who find themselves thrust upon their own resources without a perfectly fair chance. A really handsome incubator of fine enameled brass and shining glass, now stands in one of the rooms on the second floor, and is a gift to the institution.

The unprepared baby is now a thing hoped for. The incubator offers every encouragement to the occupant to take a long breath and try again. No baby that is possessed of the smallest bump of gratitude can resist its dainty and accurate devices for helping him to catch his breath. The doctors and nurses at the institution are warmly interested, and are looking forward to an opportunity for testing the apparatus.

As is well known, thousands of babies have been saved through the incubator, and it is difficult in looking at what seems a very simple and pretty bit of hospital equipment, to realize how very important is its place in the institution. It stands upon slender legs, as does the common incubator for "hatching" chickens, and its mechanism is almost as simple. It shines with cleanliness, every inch of the surface, both within and without, appearing to have been vigorously polished. In these details lies its main distinction from the other apparatus, and it is only in these that the higher uses—those of preserving human life—are indicated.

The incubator proper is a cube of about two feet in dimensions. Double doors open to admit the baby, and then shut him in, his food being given to him through the slide. No draughts can blow upon him—there is a mechanism within to regulate "all the winds that blow" to the proper temperature and quality. A tiny white mattress rests upon the floor space, upon a wire support, beneath which, in turn, is located the heating and ventilating mechanism.

Absolute simplicity is the key note in the whole thing, as suits the baby, who hasn't had time to cultivate his tastes, and demand a spring bed and a frescoed ceiling. To the right is the heating apparatus. Within is the hydrometer to indicate the temperature. "Body heat" is the prescribed standard—sometimes a degree above, never one below. To the left is an appliance for ventilation by which the air is filtered and moistened before being admitted to the incubator chamber. And surrounding the whole is a whirle-gig arrangement at the top supplementing the work of ventilation.

SIZE OF THE SUN.

Diagram Which Shows the Comparative Insignificance of the Earth.

A glance at the accompanying picture will show that the largest of the planets, including the earth, could all be put into the sun without making very much impression. Compared with Jupiter, that looks so small in the sky, the earth is a pigmy. It would take 1,330 earths to make one Jupiter. Saturn is not much smaller, and with its rings even larger than Jupiter. Venus is about the size of the earth, but on account of its brilliancy seems larger than Jupiter. We see her so seldom because she is so near the sun that the great rays of the sun obscure the shining Venus much of the time. The distance from the sun to Jupiter is 104,000,000 miles, in which are many small stars or asteroids, some of which are not more than 100 miles in diameter. The atmosphere around Jupiter is so thick that we could not breathe it; in fact it is almost water, and this is due to the fact that Jupiter is five times further from the sun than the earth, and gets only one-twenty-fifth as much heat and light from the sun as we do. If a man stood on Jupiter the sun would look no larger than an apple to his eyes. It would take a long time to travel all over Jupiter, for it is 19,000 miles in diameter at its equator, and, being flattened at the poles, just like the earth, 18,400 miles in diameter from north to south. If the sun were in any way to cease to act as the center of the celestial system, Jupiter is heir apparent to the throne and would take his place.

Music for Nervousness.

Scientists claim that music has power to soothe the nerves. But the quickest way to cure nervousness is to strengthen the nervous system. We know of nothing which will accomplish this quicker than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Do not take a substitute. See that a private revenue stamp covers the neck of the bottle.

The Origin of Whist.

The game of whist originated in England. It is believed to have developed from the older game of triumph, or trump, which was played as early as 1350. In fact, in that year sermons were preached denouncing the game as one that tended to take the mind off the truths of religion. In 1421 whist is first mentioned in English literature.

"Mutilation" of Trees.

A prefect in a certain French town issued a declaration ordering severe measures to be taken against divers malicious persons who amused themselves by stripping the bark from the plane trees bordering the public promenade. "The trees thus mutilated," so ran the affiche, "present a most pitiable appearance." However, as, in spite of the prefect's declaration, the "mutilation" continued unabated, the worthy functionary summoned his head clerk to consult with him on the matter. Thereupon the clerk informed him that, as the plane trees themselves shed their bark every year, it would be futile to institute proceedings against such incorrigible offenders. The clerk seemed amused, but the prefect did not; anyway, the notices were removed with more than official dispatch.

OBITUARY

Anna (Becker) wife of John Pepple, was born in Lancaster county, Pa , on the 22nd day of December 1821. When about two years old, she removed with her parents to Mansfield, Ohio, with whom she lived until united in marriage to Mr. John Pepple on the third day of December 1840. To them were born thirteen children, four sons and nine daughters, seven of whom are still living. Forty-three years ago Mr. and Mrs. Pepple came to DeKalb county, Indiana, and settled on the farm on which they are now ilving. They enjoyed the happiness and blessings and shared together the trials and sorrows of married life for nearly 59 years, when death came on last Thursday, Aug. 31, and severed their relationship. Mother Pepple departed this life at the ripe age of seventy-eight years, three months and nine days. After her marriage to Mr. Pepple she became a christian and united with the Evangelical church in Waterloo. Since that time she lived a faithful christian life, and died with the blessed assurance of divine acceptance before the throne of God. How peaceful and blessed must be the close of life who has walked and communed with God for so many years here below. Thus after a long life of faithful service, the Master said, "It is enough, come up higher." Mother Pepple leaves to mourn her a companion, seven children, eleven grandchildren, two sisters and one brother besides many other friends. Mother Pepple was a devoted wife, an affectionate and sacrificing mother, and a kind neighbor. The funeral service was conducted from the house Sabbath Sept. 3, at 2 p. m., interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Clara Gertrude, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cool, was born January 20, 1899. and departed this life last Thursday evening, August 31, 1899 at the early age of 7 months and 11 days. Little Clara leaves to mourn her death, father, mother, three brothers, three sisters and many other friends. Thus in the very dawning of the morning of life, while yet the rose of innocence was on her cheeks, that her little spirit was wafted to the bosom of Jesus on bright angels' wings. The death of little Clara, though sad, is yet a hopeful event; for in death she escaped the stern realities of life, and is forever free the heartaches, sorrows and sins of this world. In death she gains a saviour: though absent from her earthly home she still lives and lives to die no more To the sorrowing parents this comforting thought remains that she has gone on before and in a little while we shall meet her again, if faithful unto death. Then weep not as those who have no faith. Little Clara was a bright child and loved by all who knew her. The funeral service was conducted from the Lockwood church five miles south of Auburn, Saturday Sept. 2, 1899. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Woodmen Win Prizes.

Yesterday was a big day for the Auburn lodge of Modern Woodmen, a big crowd of whom attended the state convention and log-rolling of the order at Robison park. The boys went down about fifty strong and when called up for the competitive drill Auburn's crack drill team showed such superiority over their Kokomo competitor, both in numbers and skill, that their easy victory was assured and first money was awarded them without any hesitation. Auburn also won a handsome regulation silk flag for having the best representation, and it will remain in their possession until the next annual meeting when they will have an opportunity to compete for it again under the same rules. Although the reduced railroad rates expected were not secured there was a good attendance at the meeting and forty-five camps were represented. The program was interesting and besides the drill a number of athletic events added interest to the occasion.

Auburn's Modern Woodmen are justly elated over their double victory. The boys have worked hard to bring their camp to its present high standing, and all of them, including their efficient drill-master, Herman Lobmiller, are entitled to much credit.

People about Vincennes are excited over that death by yellow fever. Several persons were exposed and it is feared the plague will spread.

The Dreyfus trial goes steadily on and for the past two days has been very favorable for the defendant. It begins to look as if he is sure to be acquitted.

A returned Cuban soldier died of yellow fever at Vincennes this week. It is unusual so far north. Several cases are reported at New Orleans and Key West.

A counterfeiter has been arrested at Indianapolis, who was just in the very act of pouring melted metal into a mould for a $20 gold piece. He will get a good term.

Northern Michigan has had a dry summer and there is danger of forest fires. These have already caused some loss in the northwest, and in the mountain districts of the west.

Two of the greatest musicians in Europe, Felix Mottl and his wife, have the whooping cough. The dispatch does not say whether the well known "whoopee" is any more musical than that given by the common people.

The Spanish prisoners who held out against the Filipinos in a stone church at Baler, island of Luzon, for nearly a year, were lately allowed to march out with the honors of war. They have just reached home, landing at Barcelona, Spain, and were properly received as heirs.

A Belgian ship on the way home from Africa, found two of the negroes on board were sick, and believing it to be a contagious disease, like yellow fever, they threw the men overboard, so this ship would not have to be detained in quarantine. The affair is to be investigated.

The latest combination is a dry goods trust. Heavy eastern capitalists are said to have fifty to a hundred millions to invest in buying up and combining, prosperous dry goods stores. They hope to take in 2,000 stores, and it is said this will include some at Fort Wayne, but the Fort Wayne dealers deny this.

Wednesday's Daily.

There was a big meeting of democrats in the city of New York Monday night, and many speeches. It all showed a growing sentiment in favor of Bryan.

Dewey has reached Gibraltar, and the great guns mounted on the great rock face thundered their loudest in honor of the great naval commander. If there is one thing a Briton admires more than another, it is a real, naval hero.

Senator Fairbanks thinks the Kaiser will stand by the President's policy in the Philippines. That is the only real undesirable part of this business, we will be continually anxious about what this or that crowned head thinks of our policy. It has always been our boast that we did not have to consult foreign nations as to our policy.

The President is reported as saying he will keep up the military control of Cuba till an election has been held to let the people decide whether they desire annexation or an independent government. This is a strange thing for him to say or do. He knows he made a public statement a year ago, that we would make no attempt to get control of the island. We believe that in the near future the Cubans will join us, and that it would be a good thing, but at present to take a step looking to induce them to do so is not honorable in us.

The great ocean steamer, City of Rome, reached New York Monday. and reports a collision with an iceberg. She was in a fog all day, and was running at only ten miles an hour, with officers and crew on the watch for icebergs that are now floating south Suddenly one appeared straight ahead, but so close they could not avoid it. The propellers were reversed full force, and the collision was not as bad as expected, and the bow of the ship cut a big chunk from one side of the mass and went past it. There was a rush of passengers, but the officer had been ready for such a thing all day, and a panic was averted. It has been some years since there was a real collision, though there is constant danger every summer. The ship had several hundred passengers, many being at dinner at the time.

The Dreyfus trial is going on, with no certainty as to how long it will occupy the court-martial. There has evidently been a rotten state affairs in the French army, at least among the officers. It has been shown pretty plainly that some of these officers have for year been selling military secrets to their chief enemy, Germany. The spendthrift officers could get more money in this way, and the Germans could afford to pay for it, for both nations maintain an army, and many fortifications on the boundary and each would be glad to know how the other is situated. The only real doubt now is, as to whether Dreyfus was selling these secrets or whether some more needy officers were doing it and now try to lay it on Dreyfus, both to save themselves and to get a hit at the Jews. Dreyfus is a Jew and his people are wealthy. The trial may last some time yet.

THE HOULTON REUNION.

Old Friends and Neighbors Unite to Do Honor to the First Pioneer.

Yesterday, Sept. 4, was the anniversary of the erection of the first white man's cabin in DeKalb county, which important event occurred sixty-six years ago.

About ten a. m. the friends began to gather at the old homestead on the banks of Fish Creek in district 1, of Franklin township, and by noon there was quite a company assembled at the usual grounds which is a lovely grove of natural trees back across the field at the rear of the present comfortable dwelling, and right on the high banks overlooking the creek. It is a fine site, and that the eye of man loves such a location is made plain by the numerous Indian hearths or fire places close to the edge of the bank and overlooking the clear waters of the stream. A large stand is kept up by the relatives or prepared each year, and in front were a great many seats prepared for the comfort of the audience while exercises were going on. For they always have a speech with abundance of good music, both vocal and instrumental, and fine recitations.

The writer, and John W. Baxter, an old time neighbor of the Houlton's, with Mrs. Baxter and Mrs. Barns, were among the invited guests, and shared the hospitality of the family. Our particular group fell to the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Houlton, who own and occupy the old home, while the other brothers took charge of other guests And when all sat down to a most generously abundant dinner, there was a busy scene. And when the tables were cleared, there was enough left to feed the scriptural 5,000. The hospitality of the Houltons is of the pioneer kind.

About two p. m. the president of the day, Hon. R. M. Lockhart, called the meeting to order and prayer was offered by Mr. Aldrich, of that vicinity.

Mr. Lockhart then gave a brief outline of what the program would be, and introduced the speaker, Gen. L. J. Blair, who he said is now the earliest settler of the county.

Gen. Blair made a most excellent speech, not long, but full of good thoughts and much valuable information. He alluded to the now well established fact that Mr. Houlton's was the first white man's house in the county and from that humble home arose the smoke from the first white man's home. Down on the "River" others came next year, the Mathews, the Yates family, Rhodes, Brant, David Butler, Lytle and the speaker's father made the eighth person on the "River" and the ninth in the county.

At the conclusion, the chairman called on various old settlers who had been neighbors of the Houltons: Balis Boyer, G. T. Abby, John N. Clark, Cyrus Bowman, J. W. Baxter and others. Mr. Bowman spoke feelingly of the early days and the pioneers. There were no churches nor school houses, and religious meetings were held in the cabins, and they were happy when someone got a barn that could be used for that purpose.

Mr. Baxter spoke as an early resident of the township, into which his father, Andrew Baxter had come at an early day. He had known Mr. Houlton and family well, and spoke highly of the many good qualities of the old pioneers, paying a high tribute to the sterling qualities they possessed.

Gen. Blair was called upon to recite Sheridan's Ride, which he did in his best manner.

Roger Houlton, the music teacher, the youngest of the family, was called to the stand and showed them an old music book of 1788, used by Samuel Houlton, who was a chorister in a church in Philadelphia at that date. This was to show how the musical talent possessed by the family had descended from ancesters.

He then exhibited two new violins, he had had made within the past year, by a skilled maker in Fort Wayne, A. B. Brooks. The first had its sides, back and neck of hard maple, taken from a bedstead made for his mother in 1838, by a Mr. Bender. She and her husband had always occupied this bed. The tail piece, was from the first apple tree planted in the county. The top is of pine from the old Fort Wayne court house. It was this violin that he played in the orchestra a few minutes later, the first it had ever been used. The work alone cost $53. By request he played an old-fashioned tune on it He spoke of the other brothers, Lewis, Mathew John and William, and their children, as generally havings fine musical talents.

The musical and literary program came next. M. K and Roger, and two sons of the former, made an excellent orchestra furnishing the first item on the list, and several later on, all fine.

Miss Maud Houlton called the list of exercises. There were recitations by Esther Jackman, Cleo Bryan, Ethel Bookmiller, Ella Case, Clarence Shultz, Bert Bryan and Leland Houlton; a little Miss Houlton sang a song and Miss Gladys Kanagy sang a solo and played the guitar. It was all nicely done, each young person showing talent and training, and all enjoyed their efforts.

Then the orchestra played "Home Sweet Home," very sweetly, and the company broke up after one of the very best reunions they ever had. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Houlton have thanks for special favors and all the rest of the family present were active in making all welcome and comfortable. The day was an ideal one.

Prominent on the background of the stage hung good pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Houlton, and in the center was the old patent deed from the U. S. government, for this first entry in the county.

—It is now unlawful to seine in the lakes and streams of the Hoosier state and seining is prohibited until next July.

THE PATENT DEED.

For the benefit of our readers we copied the Houlton "First Deed" in full. It reads:

CERTIFICATE NO. 2201.

The United States of America.

TO ALL WHOM THIS MAY COME, GREETING:

Whereas JOHN HOULTON, of Williams County, Ohio, has deposited in the General Land Office of the United States a certificate of the Register of the Land Office of the United States at Fort Wayne, whereby it appears that full payment has been made by the said John Houlton, according to the provisions of an act of Congress of the 24th day of April, 1820, entitled: An Act making further provisions for the sale of public lands, for the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, in township 35, north, of range 8 14 east, in the district of land subject to sale at Fort Wayne, Indiana, containing forty acres according to the official plat of the survey of the said lands, returned to the General Land Office by the Surveyor-General, which said tract has been purchased by the said John Houlton:

KNOW YE, That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises in conformity to the several acts of Congress in such cases made and provided, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto the said John Houlton and his heirs, the said tract above described, to have and to hold the same together with all the privileges, immunities and appurtenances of whatever nature thereunto belonging, unto the said John Houlton and to his heirs and assigns forever.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I, ANDREW JACKSON, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the City of Washington, this second day of September, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand, Eight Hundred and Thirty-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the Thirty-ninth. By the President: ANDREW JACKSON.

ST. JOE.

St. Joe schools opened last Monday. Harry Meek does the janitor work, $50 for nine months.

The school board can count all the township transfers on their fingers and have some to go on.

M. H. Widney has taken an appeal to the state superintendent of public instruction on his transfer against the township trustee and county superintendent.

Mrs. Emma Woodcox, son Caddie and Austin Eicholtz drove to Fort Wayne last Friday.

It is rumored that there are to be two weddings in the near future.

Only one preacher in our town now. If there ever was a time when the evil one could get in his work, it's about time now, and judging from appearances we should say that sleep did not occupy much of his time.

Died, at Spencerville, Sunday evening, Mr. Wall Fales. She leaves a family of six children (all small) and a husband to mourn her loss.

At this writing Chris Curie is very sick and the doctors fear an attack of typhoid fever.

Wanted, at the St. Joe elevator, ten thousand bushels of barley for which the highest market price will be paid.

Comments are freely indulged in regarding to the deplorable condition of the school house grounds. A petition to the township trustee or the board of commissioners would probably bring relief. Why don't the St. Joe News open up; it was most always willing to do so under the old regine.

George W. Woodcox eas a job of cleaning Bear creek for a distance of (12,065) twelve thousand and sixty-five feet.

NOTICE.

On Thursday evening of this week Sept. 7, at 7:30, will be held the annual election of church officers. At this meeting a full attendance of the membership is expected. Two elders, and two deacons are to be elected for a term of two years. Do not forget to bring your lead pencils.—J. D. BROSY, Pastor.

Sudden Death.

Report of a very sudden death comes from Jackson township. James Hamilton, son of John Hamilton, had just returned from a call he and his wife had made to her father, Willis Bishop. She went into the house and he went to put away the horse. He did not return as they expected and his father went out to see what was the matter. Not finding him at the barn, he knew he must have gone to take the horse to the field. So he went there, and found James lying on the ground at the gate he had just opened. He was unconscious, probably dead then. But the father carried him to the house, and all possible was done to revive him but in vain. He was supposed to be in good health, and had never had heart disease as far as known. But it is now remembered that he had lately, once or twice, complained of something like a rheumatic pain in the chest. This may have been rheumatism of the heart.

The funeral services will be held at Rehobeth church tomorrow at 10 o'clock, Rev. Brosy officiating. Interment in Woodlawn under the direction of G. S McCord.

A Well Pleased Audience.

That the Keystone dramatic company has lost none of its popularity with our theater-goers was evidenced last night by the large and attentive audience that witnessed their opening play, "Escaped from the Law," at Henry's opera house. True to the promise made by Mr. McGill on the occasion of his last visit here, the company has been considerably strengthened and the stars, Miss Shipman and Mr. McGill are supported by a capable lot of ladies and gentlemen. New scenery is used in the production of their plays and the specialties, which serve to fill the waits between acts and make the show a continuous one are some of the best our people have seen, the dancing and singing being exceptionally well done. The play last night was a new one here and was rendered in a most pleasing manner, every member of the company giving evidence of talent and careful training.

Rare Old Books.

S. Z. Dickinson, while in town the the other day, left for our perusual two very old books. One is an arithmetic, all copied into a book with a pen, the work being done by his father about 1802. It is a marvel of patience and painstaking, such as would be impossible to find today. All the problems and other work are faithfully copied and plainly shown. The other work is a book of devotion, being the second volume of the work by the celebrated German scholar and author, Sturm. It is translated into English and bears date of being printed is 1802. It has a chapter for each day of the year, each chapter illustrating the goodness and mercy of God, by reference to some living or natural object. Thus, the chapter to be studied today, the chapter is on the "Lion Ant" whose wonderful instinct is described and from it a lesson is derived to show the marvelous things in creation and how God has provided a way for all his creatures to sustain and care for themselves.

ANOTHER BALL GAME

The game of ball Saturday between a team picked from the carriage factories and one from players about town was attended by a crowd numbering about 300 people. While there were a number of brilliant plays, some of which would do credit to professional ball tossers, the game taken as a whole was not the best ever seen in Auburn by a long shot. Of course this was due in a great measure to careless work of the players, but there were those among the audience who thought the umpire should come in for his share of the blame. We are free to say that we have seen better umpires, but in justice to Capt. Lahnum it must be said that he did as well, probably, as some of the kickers who were dissatisfied with his decisions, and while some of them may have been a little "off color" none were made with an intent to defraud either team, as some of the rooters intimated. Briefly told the game resulted in a victory for the town team by the following score:

DREYFUS HAS A DAY.

CORDIER'S EVIDENCE STRONGLY FAVORS PRISONER.

Never Thought Bordereau Enough to Warrant Conviction—Backs Opinion with Proof—Former Minister of War De Freycinet Explains "Syndicate."

Tuesday was another good Dreyfus day. Lieut. Col. Cordier, retired, who was a member of the intelligence bureau at the time Dreyfus was there, occupied most of the time of the court martial. His testimony was strongly in favor of the accused. M. de Freycinet, former minister of war, also testified regarding the "foreign syndicate" reported to have been formed to fight for Dreyfus' freedom. He admitted frankly that he had no basis for the statement. Lieut. Col. Cordier was first called to the stand. He testified that at first he believed Dreyfus guilty, but later he became sure there was no proof of the guilt of the accused and certain facts tended strongly to the presumption that he was innocent.

He related the first description given of the traitor. It was that he was a colonel, 45 years old and decorated, which did not answer closely to Dreyfus. The last named was 34 and not decorated. Then the witness, continuing, said: "Foreign officers are aware that some of the members of our service make a regular business of treason." This was received with murmurs of surprise and negation by the audience. "Some of these know only French, but there are others who are linguists, such as Esterhazy, for instance, who is proficient in the languages."

"Col. Sandherr," continued Cordier, "was loyal and a patriot and he died an honest man. Trouble began in the bureau with the arrival of Col. Henry. Before that there was harmony. Sandherr disliked Henry. The latter's famous forgeries were simply committed in order to demolish the evidence amassed by Lieut. Col. Picquart. There is no proof of Dreyfus' guilt, while on the other hand there were numerous suspicious acts in other quarters." Maj. Lauth here arose and disputed certain of the dates and facts mentioned by Cordier. Later, however, he firmly reiterated his statements.

M. Labori then read a telegram from a man named Pages, who was a friend of Col. Sandherr, denying that Matthieu Dreyfus attempted to bribe him (Sandherr).

Gen. Roget now confronted Lieut. Col. Cordier, saying: "What part of my deposition are you pleased to designate as false?" Cordier: "It is all false." A long dispute between Gen. Roget and the witness then ensued.

"Were you not an anti-Semite in 1894?" asked Gen. Roget. "Yes, I was," replied Cordier, "and I still object to having Jews in the army, but not enough to bring false evidence against one of them who is accused of the crime of treason." This direct thrust at Gen. Roget caused a great sensation.

Col. Fleur and Archivist Gribelin of the general staff also confronted the witness. Their argument, however, was without result.

Gen. Mercier then took the stand, and to the surprise of every one supported Cordier in some of his statements. He also affirmed Pages' telegram, read by M. Labori, to the effect that Matthieu Dreyfus ever attempted to bribe Sandherr was correct.

The next witness was former Minister of War de Freycinet. He looked like a little white mouse, which, in fact, is his political nickname. M. de Freycinet testified in barely audible squeaks. The witness first testified in regard to the 35,000,000 franc foreign syndicate to free Dreyfus. He said he got the idea that it existed from a discussion with Jamont on possible coincidences and happenings as the Dreyfus case progressed. This was the only basis for his statement to Gen. Mercier that such a syndicate existed.

Col. Jouaust, president of the court, then asked the witness what was his opinion of Dreyfus. M. de Freycinet replied: "I will be satisfied, Colonel, with whatever verdict the court renders as correct."

The audience was disappointed at this diplomatic answer, which saved the witness from publicly declaring his opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

M. Labori asked M. de Freycinet: "Do you know a single fact which would lead you to think that any foreign agent had done anything in France to bring about a revision of the Dreyfus case?" "No, nothin," replied de Freycinet. "Or anything that would influence the court of cassation?" insisted Labori. "No," emphatically said the former war minister.

The court adjourned after the testimony of a few minor witnesses was heard. M. Gallichet, a reporter on military matters, and a friend of Col. Henry's, testified that Henry was uncommonly uncommunicative when the Dreyfus case was on. Belhomme, another handwriting expert, who testified at the Esterhazy trial, persisted that the bordereau was not written by Esterhazy. He would not say, however, that Dreyfus wrote it.

DREYFUS CONDUCTED FROM PRISON TO COURT.

On leaving the prison Captain Dreyfus passes between a line of soldiers, who are drawn up at attention with their front to the crowds on each side.

ON THE VERGE OF WAR.

British and Boers Likely to Soon Begin Hostile Operations.

There is no diminution in the tension over the Transvaal crisis. War is now discussed in London as a certainty. It is the consensus of opinion that Kruger is proving himself a great man at his country's expense. The reserve of the royal artillery has been instructed to hold itself in readiness for service in South Africa. This is the most serious military announcement since the beginning of the crisis, and points to early action in the field and to the certainty of a conflict. Unless President Kruger is aggressive, it is reckoned that the first engagement will come about the beginning of October.

PAUL KRUGER.

In the event of war the headquarters staff must turn to the artillery, for British infantry—even if 80,000 be sent, as is suggested—will be shot down like partridges by the Boers. The artillery, however, next to the engineers, is the strongest branch of the land forces.

PRESIDENT KRUGER'S HOME.

The Pretoria correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle, telegraphing on Tuesday, says: "Events have taken an alarming turn. Great Britain, at the request of the Uitlanders' Council, has enlarged the original demands of Sir Alfred Milner, the British High Commissioner, and is adopting the view of Cecil Rhodes that President Kruger will never withstand an ultimatum. I have, however, high authority for asserting that President Kruger, the Volksraad and the nation will unitedly resist an unconditional demand for giving effect to the Milner program, but will concede reforms on the conditions already reported."

Both the Transvaal and Britain are busy seeing to their military preparations, and in Pretoria a most gloomy view is taken as to the outcome. Indeed, in telegrams received in London it is stated that war is certain, but the papers hesitate to publish them owing to their gravity.

In an interview Tuesday, President Kruger said that the Boer position was best described in Psalm lxxxiii., 1-5 and 13-7, in which the psalmist declares that the enemies of the Lord have banded together against his people to exterminate them, and calls upon him to punish them, to fill them with shame, and to cause them to perish.

The London Daily Mail's Cape Town correspondent says it is estimated that 15,000 persons have left the Transvaal since the crisis arose. The Government has announced in the Assembly that it is considering greater facilities to enable women and children to leave Johannesburg.

In view of the increased tension in South Africa the Government of Queensland is making preliminary arrangements for the dispatch of its military contingent.

FARMERS IN POOL.

Men with the Hoe Unite in Twenty Million Trust.

The Farmers' Federation of the Mississippi Valley has been organized at Topeka, Kan., and officers elected. Walter N. Allen of Meriden is president and business manager. The object of the federation is to regulate and control the shipment of farm products of all the States in the Mississippi valley, to establish and maintain offices, yards, grain elevators, to maintain agents to handle, sell and distribute such products, and to lend and borrow money and do a banking business at Topeka, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati and New Orleans. The capital stock will be $20,000,000, in shares of $10 each.

President Allen, in a long statement of the purposes of the federation, says the cost in commissions for marketing the products in the Mississippi valley is over $21,000,000. He plans that his company shall do this business for the farmers for less than $1,000,000. The by-laws provide that there shall be no rebates to shippers or dividends paid to stockholders, and that the surplus earnings shall be reserved to finance a bank department, to pay interest on the bonds of the company and for the purchase of the business and good will of commission houses.

CAUSED BY A WEIGHT.

Collapse of Chicago Coliseum Said to Be Due to This.

Searching investigation made Wednesday probably establishes the cause of the collapse of the twelve giant steel arches for the Chicago Coliseum, killing ten laboring men and injuring a score of others. A bias weight upon two arches at the extreme north end of the structure where the trusses first gave way is regarded as the cause of the awful accident.

A Chicago dispatch says that experts who searched the ruins discovered four large chains attached to these two arches. From them were suspended two-inch ropes, running through a pulley, and the former wound around a cross section of heavy iron timber. The jarring of the hoisting engine and the attempt either to hoist or lower this beam is said to have brought down the two steel arches and they in turn caused the collapse of all the remaining steel framework.

MAY ENLIST NATIVE MOROS.

Exploit of Dato Mundi Gives War Department an Idea.

The dispatches from Gen. Otis, referring to the attack on the insurgents by Dato Mundi, were extremely gratifying to the War Department officials, and were at once communicated to President McKinley. The fight is the first direct result of Gen. Bates' visit to the Sultan of Sulu. At that time the Sultan agreed to accept the American flag, and as evidence of his loyalty offered to make war on pirates and insurgents.

It was not definitely known whether permission had been given, but the report seems to indicate that such permission was given when the same request came from the Mindanao warrior, Dato Mundi, as one of the most powerful chiefs on the island.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Already during the present season over a score of horses have entered the 2:10 list, among them the trotters Surpol, Gayton and Copeland.

It is a remarkable fact that since the organization of the present twelve-club team in 1891 grandstands in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Louisville have been burned down.

W. J. White has signed a contract with S. S. Thomas of the Empire City Driving Park, New York, to start Star Pointer in a race for $4,000. The entries are to be limited to Joe Patchen, John R. Gentry, Searchlight and Star Pointer. The race is to occur in September.

CONDITION OF CROPS.

No Rain in Some Sections and Too Much in Others.

A summary of crop conditions issued by the Department of Agriculture says that while the drought conditions reported at the close of the previous week have been relieved considerably in the South Atlantic States the drought continues with increased severity in Texas, Oklahoma, Southern Missouri and Michigan, and rain is much needed in the Ohio valley, the lower lake region, New England and generally throughout the Southern and Central Rocky Mountain districts. Very favorable weather conditions prevail in Iowa, Northern Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, but as in the previous week, reports of the effects of excessive moisture are received from the Dakotas and Minnesota.

The general condition of corn in the States of the central Mississippi and Ohio valleys is less satisfactory than at the close of the previous week, owing to continued absence of moisture, which has conduced to the too rapid maturity. The weather conditions in Iowa, northern Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Minnesota and in the middle Atlantic States have been more favorable, and generally the crop has made good progress in these States, although late corn is somewhat less promising in portions of Nebraska and Kansas. Reports of injury to grain in shock and stack continues from the Dakotas and Minnesota, principally, however, as a result of rains of the previous weeks. Grain in shock has also been injured by rains in Washington and Oregon, but in the last named State the rains were of greater benefit to the late spring grain and other crops.

In the western portion of the cotton belt there is quite a general deterioration in the condition of the crop. Favorable progress has been made in cutting and housing tobacco, which work is generally well advanced.

The previously reported unfavorable outlook for apples continues, although some varieties, principally the early, are abundant in portions of Nebraska, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana and in the middle Atlantic States and southern New England.

Much plowing for fall seeding is being done in Iowa, northern Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, but the condition of the soil has been unfavorable for this work in the States of the Ohio valley and New England and the west gulf districts.

EASY FOR IDOLITA.

Wins the Rich Horse Review Stake in Straight Heats.

The largest crowd ever assembled in Dubuque was there to see the Futurity at Nutwood Park, for a $20,000 stake. Two hours before the time set for the races to begin more than 10,000 persons had passed through the park gates and when the Futurity was called it was in the presence of at least 20,000 people.

IDOLITA.

The Futurity candidates scored down for the first heat about 1:30 o'clock. Twelve of the nineteen entered started in the race. Idolita took the race in straight heats, the best time being made in the first—2:12½. Ecstasy was second, Rita E. third, Ima Electrite fourth and My Trick fifth. It was a great race, notwithstanding the favorite won in straight heats. When it had been finished the winners were paid in crisp bank notes, in fine leather pocketbooks appropriately lettered in gold. The Horse Review purse of $20,000 was divided as follows:

First	$9,000	Fourth	$1,250
Second	4,500	Fifth	500
Third	2,250

The estate of Senator Stanford, nominator of the sire of the winer and nominator of the winner, $2,000.

J. H. Thayer & Brother, Lancaster, Mass., owner of Baron Wilkes, sire of the second horse, $250.

Major McDowell, owner of the second horse, $250 additional to the purse as nominator of the second horse.

TROOPS HOME FROM MANILA.

Idaho, North Dakota and Wyoming Volunteers Arrive.

The United States transport Grant, bearing the Idaho, North Dakota and Wyoming volunteers, arrived at San Francisco Tuesday night. The Grant left Manila Aug. 1, touched at Nagasaki and Yokohama and left the latter port for San Francisco Aug. 13.

The transport brings thirty officers and 516 enlisted men of the First North Dakota, twenty-eight officers and 445 enlisted men of the First Idaho, twelve officers and 243 enlisted men of the First Wyoming, two officers and fifty-seven enlisted men of Battery A, Wyoming light artillery; eight officers and eighty-four discharged soldiers, twenty-five convalescent patients, seven naval prisoners, two naval hospital patients and four civilian passengers. The transport carried in addition a crew of 156 men, making a total on board of 1,619 persons. During the voyage there were five deaths.

Lincoln, Neb., welcomed home the fighting First Nebraska regiment Tuesday night with the booming of cannon, red fire and an open-armed display of hospitality and enthusiasm which the boys themselves confessed outclassed anything they had seen or heard since their departure from there nearly sixteen months ago. There was not a sick man among them and all were able to display their joy at meeting relatives, sweethearts and near friends. The progress of the trains bearing the First Nebraska through the State was one continuous ovation.

VIRGIN'S STATUE IN ALPS.

Colossal Image Sculptured by Italy's Queen Dedicated.

Thousands of people Tuesday climbed Mont Rocca Melone, one of the highest peaks in the Alps, to attend the dedication of a colossal statue of the Virgin erected on the amount through the contribution of 10,000 children and sculptured by Queen Margaret herself. The royal princes were among those present at the ceremony. On the base of the statue is an inscription by the Pope praying the Virgin to guard the frontier of Italy.

The statue commemorates what is regarded as an act of divine intervention. About two years ago, a company of Alpine militia were marching over Rocca Melone when an avalanche started and buried them in snow. Assistance was summoned and all of the entombed men were rescued.

ALABAMA VERY FAST.

New Battleship Makes a Record of 17.2 Knots an Hour.

The new Alabama, a new terror of the seas, made her first runs over the course between Five Fathom lightship and Northeast lightship, off Delaware Bay, Tuesday. Fresh from Cramp's shipyard, the Alabama made four runs over a distance of eleven and one-half knots, and in the last of these attained the highest rate of speed ever reached by a United States ship of her class on an initial trial—17.2 knots per hour. This speed was obtained on the last run under forced draught, 165 pounds of steam and 113½ revolutions of the propellers. The wind at the time favored the vessel, blowing strong from the northeast.

COURAGE.

It is not that they never knew
Weakness or fear who are the brave;
Those are the proud, the knightly few
Whose joy is still to serve and save.

But they who, in the weary night,
Amid the darkness and the stress,
Have struggled with disease and blight
With pitiful world-weariness.

They who have yearns to stand among
The free and mighty of the earth,
Whose sad, aspiring souls are wrung
With starless hope and hollow mirth—

Who die with every day, yet live
Through merciless, unbrightened years,
Whose sweetest right is to forgive
And smile divinely through their tears;

They are the noble, they the strong,
They are the tried, the trusted ones,
And though their way is hard and long—
Straight to the pitying God it runs.

OKLAHOMA HARVESTERS RUN BY MAN POWER.

The farmers of Oklahoma have decided to do away with horses to pull their binders and reapers. At this day the machines can be drawn so easily and horseflesh is at such a high price that it is cheaper to advertise for a gang of tramps and hire them to pull the machines during the harvest. The first work of this kind was done on the big "101" ranch, in the northern part of the Cherokee strip. "Joe" Miller, the man who owns the ranch, says that he has hired teams from the neighbors to help him in his harvest for many years, and that this year he hired twenty tramps, and the work was done at just half the cost. In Oklahoma the ranches are so large that no one man owns enough horses to do the work, and in harvest time a horse is a scarce article and costs a great price.

LOTTIE'S VACATION

"YOU are still determined to spend your vacation with Grandmother Eton at the old farm," said Mrs. Armstrong to her youngest daughter, who had returned home a few days previous from Vassar. "Yes, mamma, I have given her my promise and I will not disappoint her or aunt Julia." "I am sorry, as I am anxious that you should spend the season with us at Bar Harbor."

"Yes, mamma, but Essie and Nell will be with you, and they will make up for my loss."

"But, my dear, what will Mr. Roylston say, or what will he think of you? We gave him to understand that you would surely go, and it will be a great disappointment to him."

"Never mind, mamma, Mr. Roylston will succeed in getting some one to amuse him as well as I possibly could." "Why, Lottie, how can you talk so when you know he adores you? There are few young ladies that would throw away the opportunity that you are now doing. Robert Royston is rich, handsome, and comes of a good family," said Mrs. Armstrong. "Yes, and considers that he can take any girl's heart and kick it "about like a football," added Lottie.

Mrs. Armstrong was horrified, but she knew it would be useless to attempt to change her self-willed child, so it was settled that Lottie would spend her vacation on the old farm.

It was not Robert Roylston's fault that he heard the above conversation, as he sat on the piazza near the room where the mother and daughter were talking, it being impossible for him to get away without letting them know that he heard at least part of their conversation. "So I take young girls' hearts and kick them round like a football? Eh, that's what my little spitfire thinks of me." Half an hour after Bob Roylston left the Armstrong cottage smoking a cigar and in a meditative mood.

"This way, if you please, miss, I will get your traps aboard." Lottie jumped into a comfortable two-seated carryall, and the hired man, after stowing away the satchels and bags, jumped in and turned the horses' heads towards the Eton farmhouse, a journey of five miles over the mountains.

Miss Lottie, sitting in the rear seat, had ample opportunity to study Grandmother Eton's hired man. He had but little to say, Lottie doing the most of the talking during the drive over the mountains.

It was a warm and hearty welcome Lottie received from grandmother and Aunt Julia. But later on, when the latter accompanied her to her room and assisted her in removing her wraps, it was evident that her mind was still on the "hired man."

"Who is he, Aunt Julia? Where did he come from? What is his name?" and fifty other questions in as many seconds were asked by Lottie. Aunt Julia replied that he was a poor student, and came up to the Profile House, where he expected to work, but was disappointed. "He asked us to take him for his board and give him any wages that we saw fit. He said his name was Edmund Roberts and he came from Plymouth, only he is the best hired man we ever hand."

Pretty as a picture was Lottie Armstrong as she entered the dining-room of the old farmhouse that day. She barely noticed that the hired man was seated at the table, but was sensitive of the fact that his eyes were continually upon her.

She scarcely looked up during the meal, but when she did she felt that his eyes were looking through her. After dessert Mr. Roberts made a simple excuse about attending to business, and left the ladies to themselves, much to Lottie's relief.

"How far is the Profile House from here, grandma?"

"About five miles," said Mrs. Eton. "Would you have any objection to Mr. Roberts driving me over there this afternoon?"

"Certainly not; order him to do anything you want done. Do not be timid in asking him; he is accommodating."

It did not take him long to get old Dobbin hitched up, and the look he gave Miss Lottie when she asked him kept her thinking where she saw Mr. Roberts before, but the heavy dark beard deceived her.

Nearly every day some of the many places of interest in the New Hampshire hills were visited. So much time did Lottie take of the hired man that another hand was employed to do the rough work.

One afternoon they started off on a huckleberry expedition. They were warned by Grandma Eton that there was a storm in the air, and to be careful. But the sun shone so brightly that no heed was taken of her warning.

'Twas late in the afternoon when a little speck appeared in the sky, but it grew wonderfully fast and black. Little drops of rain commenced to fall, sharp flashes of lightning made the sky vivid, while the roll of thunder made them think heaven's artillery was let loose. Peal upon peal followed one after the other, and the rain fell in torrents.

The berrypickers ran at the first sign of the storm, but when they arrived at the place where they had left their team the storm was at its height. To make matters worse, old Dobbin had broken his halter and started for home.

"What shall we do; O, what shall we do?" cried Lottie. "O, Robert; O, I mean Mr. Roberts; no, I mean Mr. Roylston. O, Robert, Bob, what shall we do?" and then, womanlike, fell in his arms in a faint.

He lifted her in his arms to a nook on the side of the mountain road, which sheltered them from the heavy rain, and when she recovered she found his bushy beard against her face and his great blue eyes looking down at her.

She could not help smiling when Bob Roylston told her that he knew that she recognized him almost from the first day, but it took lightning and thunder from a clear sky to make her acknowledge it.

But, of course, the clouds cleared away and the sun smiled down upon the lovers. Explanations followed. Lottie said the reason she wouldn't go to Bar Harbor was on account of a little flirtation that occurred between Robert and Aggie Larkin. He said the reason he did not go to Bar Harbor was that he did not want to make a "foot-ball out of the girls' hearts" to kick about as he pleased.

But the fact that Grandmother Eton had to get a new "hired man," and that wedding cards had been sent to the elite at Bar Harbor, the names of Miss Lottie Armstrong and Mr. Robert Roylston being prominently mentioned therein, showed that a happy reconciliation had taken place.—Boston Post.

Ominous.

When Julia, Mrs. Blank's maid of all work, came to her mistress and "gave notice" because she was going to be married, Mrs. Blank said:

"You know, Julia, that marriage is a pretty serious thing."

"Yes'm," replied Julia, "but not gittin' married is a more seriouser thing sometimes, don't you think? Anyhow, it'll be as serious for him as for me if we don't git along all right. But then, as you say, gittin' married is about the seriousest piece of bizness a body can ingage in, an' mebbe I am a fool an' mebbe he's a bigger one. There's no tellin'. It's a turrible solemn thing, as I reckon you've found out by this time. Like enough I'll sip sorrow, but so will he, that's one comfort."—Detroit Free Press.

Prophecies of Mother Shipton.

An interesting fact which may not be generally known is that the things and events predicted by Mother Shipton in 1448 have all come to pass except that referring to the ending of the world in 1881. The latest fulfillment of the seeress's predictions is the successful use of the automobile. Here is the text of the famous prophecy:

Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with woe.
Around the world man's thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
Waters shall yet more wonders do.
How strange! but yet they shall be true.
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at the root of a tree.
Through hills man shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side.
Under water man shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen
In white, in black, in green.
Iron on the water shall float
As easily as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found and shown
In lands now not known.
England shall at last admit a Jew,
And fire and water shall wonders do.
The world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

PICTURES OF A WRECK.

Smashup Near Boone, Iowa, the Most Complete on Record.

Louis L. Troy, of Chicago, superintendent of the sixth division, railway mail service, has photographs of what is said to be the most complete wreck in the history of the service. The smash-up is that which overtook the Chicago and Northwestern fast mail train on Moingona hill, near Boone, Iowa, the morning of Aug. 1. In this wreck four men were killed and six injured.

The train consisted of an engine, two express cars, and four mail cars. It was running about sixty miles an hour, and was on what is known as "Kate Shelley" curve, a half-circle at the foot of a fifteen-foot grade. For a considerable time workmen had been at work reducing the grade and the curve, and it was nearly completed when the accident occurred.

The engine jumped the track and the train tore over and past it, stripping it clean. The express cars were wiped out, their fragments lying under the first mail car. The third mail car was nothing but a mass of kindling when it came to a rest at the edge of a cornfield The roof was lifted off and thrown twenty feet from the body of the car, turning upside down in its flight. One of the most remarkable things about this part of the wreck was the fact that five gas lamps which were suspended beneath the roof were not injured. As can be seen by the accompanying picture, one end and a few feet of the sides were all that was left of the car.

"Kate Shelley" curve is just west of Boone and east of the Des Moines river. It is named for Kate Shelley. Several years ago this girl crossed the Des Moines river in a raging storm on the girders of the railway bridge, that had been demolished by a freshet, and stopped a fast passenger train in time to avert a terrible accident. The girl was a national heroine, and was splendidly rewarded by the railroad company and the passengers on the train.

The curve is a dangerous one, and for twenty years the company has watched it night and day to guard against wrecks. Trainmen lay stress upon the singular fact that after twenty years without an accident at that spot, and only twenty-four hours before the curve and grade would have been greatly reduced, a catastrophe should have occurred to the fast mail and four lives lost.

When the express and mail cars went tearing into the engine the engineer and fireman were instantly killed. Practically nothing was left of the locomotive except the boiler. The cab was cleaned off the frame and the driving wheels twisted under the boiler. The front truck was found in the corn field, 150 feet from the track. The engine remained well up on the embankment. One of the trucks of an express car, by one of those curious tricks which appear in nearly all great catastrophes, remained firmly on the track, and ran, under its own momentum, as far as the bridge over the river.

WRECK OF THE FAST MAIL.

Wanted the Letter.

She confronted him at the breakfast table.

"George, I want that letter in your pocketbook. Please give it to me. Don't refuse."

A guilty look swept over his face, and he answers hoarsely: "W-what letter, my dear?"

"Why, a V; but if you could make it an X it would do just as well. I've got some shopping to do."

And he is so grateful at the hairbreadth escape that he makes it a XX. —Chicago News.

He Rebelled.

"Yes. They expect to be divorced in a little while."

"What's the trouble?"

"Is that so?" ejaculated Hennypeck, in an eager whisper. "They can have mine."—London Tit-Bits.

ANOTHER POLAR FAILURE.

Wellman's Unsuccessful Attempt to Reach the North Pole.

Another North Polar expedition has come to grief. It is that of Walter Wellman, the well-known Washington newspaper man, who set out last year to find the pole, and who has just returned, barely with life, to the verge of civilization.

Wellman and his party wintered at Cape Tegethoff, on the southern point of Hull's Island in latitude 80. In the middle of February Welman began his dash for the pole, and a month later had high expectations of reaching it, until a succession of disasters began. The daring explorer fell into an ice crevasse, seriously injuring one of his legs, and two days later an icequake killed many of the sledge dogs and destroyed the bulk of the sledges. There was no alternative but to retreat, and for 200 miles Wellman was dragged on a sledge by the faithful Norwegians of the party. Wellman is still unable to walk and with the prospects of being a cripple for life.

WALTER WELLMAN.

The expedition, while failing in reaching the pole, explored regions hitherto unknown and collected much valuable scientific information. No trace of the Andree expedition was found in Franz Josef Land.

SIGSBEE'S DAUGHTER WEDS.

Ceremony Performed Over a Year Ago with Much Mystery.

Miss Mary Ellen Sigsbee, only daughter of Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee, the gallant commander of the United States battleship Maine when she was blown up in the harbor of Havana, stole a march on her friends and was secretly married in New York City Nov. 26, 1898, to Balfour Kerr, a young artist. Many precautions were taken to prevent the identity of Miss Sigsbee and Mr. Kerr from becoming known. Distortion of names was even resorted to. The circumstances attending the marriage were most mysterious.

MISS MARY ELLEN SIGSBEE

Miss Sigsbee went to New York from Washington to attend the classes of the Art Students' League in competition for the life class scholarship. She carried off the prize. At the end of the term of 1897-'98 she returned to her home in Washington. Not even her intimate friends suspected that in addition to the prize of the life class scholarship she had also promised to become the wife of Mr. Kerr. In October, 1898, she returned to New York to resume her studies. The following month the marriage ceremony was performed.

First Daily Was Written.

It has been discovered that what may be called the first daily newspaper was a manuscript letter written by salaried correspondents and forwarded by them every twenty-four hours from London to the provinces. That was in the days of the early Stuarts.

During the commonwealth these London letters were printed in type and circulated in large numbers. Even so long ago as 1680 the law of libel was such as to be characterized by Judge Scroggs as making any newspaper publication illegal and tending to provoke a breach of the peace.

Defoe, the author of "Robinson Crusoe," was one of the early journalists, his paper being called the Review. Then there was Tutchin, whose weekly publication, the Observer, cost, according to evidence he gave in a court of justice, half a guinea to print, though the typesetter eventually raised his price to 20 shillings. The Observer had a certified circulation of 266 copies.

Afterward came the Grants, Steele, Addison and Johnson, who might have lived in the vicinity of Grubb street, but were court favorites for all that.

The Times employed the first foreign correspondent in the person of Henry Crabb Robinson, and succeeded in "scooping" the government itself in the news of the battle of Waterloo.—Chicago Chronicle.

ELECTRICAL COOKING

Has Proved a Great Success Wherever It Has Been Tried.

Electricity is making its way into the kitchen through the parlor and dining-room, says the Cosmopolitan. For some time it has been used for the heating of the 5 o'clock tea kettle, eliminating the dangers which are always incurred when an alcohol lamp is used. A tea kettle, coffee pot or chafing dish may be adjusted to the nearest lamp in a house wired for electric lighting.

The experienced cook knows that there are dishes which are never seen in their perfection ten feet from the fire that cooked them. People who have passed their youth in the country grow peevish over the way years have deteriorated the flavor of some simple early favorite of the table. Electrical appliances have done something to bring back the old conditions. Griddle cakes baked on a steel griddle, electrically heated to the exact temperature, lightly brushed with oil, are a crisp delight as they are flipped from griddle to plate. But while this appliance can be used with the illuminating current, it requires an extra attachment, as that current is too weak. This is generally put in at the leg of the dining table. Up to this time electricity has been used almost exclusively by the woman who makes a fad of experimental cooking, and she has her electric kitchen fitted up like a small laboratory, far from the domain of the family cuisine.

The whole paraphernalia might fit into a tiled closet almost anywhere, so hooded and ventilated that no odor escapes into the surrounding rooms. In one of the apartment houses in New York dainty little electric kitchens have been fitted up where the tenants have asked for them, although the apartments were not designed for housekeeping originally.

Printing Without Ink.

An English company has been formed to print, without the use of ink in any form, by simply bringing the plate into contact with chemically dampened paper, linen, silk, wool, or other fabric, and obtaining a good, clear impression of any desired density. The operation is as quick and more simple than letter-press printing, and the work resembles in clearness and delicacy a copper-plate or litho-engraving. Ordinary printer's type, blocks, form, stereotypes and electrotypes may be used as a printing surface, and drawings, etc., requiring several blocks of electros, lithographic work, or copperplate engraving can be done at a great saving. Original sketches, scrolls, or fancy lettering can be made upon the transparency, or traced through from drawn or printed sketches, the words being typed in their respective places, and, if printed on opaque paper, photographic replicas of any size can be made, while engravings can be reproduced direct from the artist's work. Any class of paper may be used, the sensitizing solution is much cheaper than printing ink, and the speed of the process is greatly in its favor.—Philadelphia Record.

"PREMIER CONSCRIPT."

The Duke of Orleans and His Wife, Archduchess of Austria.

Prince Louis Philippe Robert, Duke of Orleans, eldest son of the late Comte de Paris, was born Feb. 6, 1869. On attaining his majority, Feb. 6, 1890, he entered Paris, and proceeding to the Maire expressed his desire, as a Frenchman, to perform military service. Whereupon he was arrested in conformity with the bill of 1886, which forbids the soil of France to the direct heirs of the families that have reigned there. He was liberated by President Carnot after a month's nominal imprisonment and conducted to the Swiss frontier. This escapade won him the title of the "Premier Conscript." Since the death of his father the Duke has resided mostly in England, but has occasionally met in Brussels the leaders in France of the Orleans party.

THE "JERSEY LILY."

The Famous Stage Beauty Once More a Bride.

Once more Mrs. Langtry, the "Jersey Lily," has come into public notice through matrimony. She is now married to Hugo Gerald de Bathe, son of a rich Englishman. Emelie Charlotte known from childhood as Lily Le Breton, was born at St. Helen's, in the island of Jersey, in 1853. She is said to claim that she was not born until 1860, but as she was married in 1874 to Edward Langtry her claim can hardly be accepted. Her father was a dean of the Church of England. He was, however, comparatively poor, and his daughter's marriage to Mr. Langtry, who was well to do, was perfectly satisfactory to him.

It was soon after her marriage that Mrs. Langtry's beauty first attracted comment. The Langtrys moved to town, and Mrs. Langtry became one of the first of the series of professional beauties. The Prince of Wales was introduced to her and became a great admirer. Fashionable life proved too expensive for Mr. Langtry, and he disappeared from London in 1881 after a financial smash. His wife refused to return to Jersey with him and went on the stage.

Since that time Mrs. Langtry has been more or less before the public. Her dramatic debut was made at the Haymarket Theater in 1881, but she did not adopt the stage regularly as a profession till the following year. After many legal delays and various unsuccessful attempts, she obtained a divorce from her husband in May, 1897, from a California court. Edward Langtry is said to have idolized his wife until his death, which occurred in an insane asylum in England on Oct. 15 in the same year as the divorce. Mrs. Langtry has made several dramatic tours in the United States, from which she derived handsome profits.

THE DARKY'S DELIGHT.

One Watermelon Rapture Immortalized by Photography.

Talk about your hambone, it am sweet;
'Possum it am very, very fine,
But de watermillion am de fruit fer me.

The accompanying cut is from a snapshot photograph taken recently by Mr. Horace A. Groff, of Marietta. Mr. Groff came upon the negro sitting near a box car loaded with melons fresh from the South. The boy was too much taken up with his melon to note the fact that he was having his picture taken. In fact, there was nothing of more importance on this earth, at that present moment, than to surround that melon. Its red, juicy interior flamed against the happy ebony features, the white ivories sank deep into the pulpy mass and the youngster's eyes rolled in that ecstasy which is only witnessed when a "cullud pusson" is in "watermillion" heaven.

"WATERMILLION" HEAVEN.

Stable Manure.

Facts about stable manure, or, rather, freshly stated conclusions, form an important part of Bulletin 58, Massachusetts experiment station. Of the three common conditions of barnyard manure, half-rotted manure is the most valuable, and well-rotted manure the least, because of their relative amount of nitrates. Manure should be kept packed away from the air as tightly as possible, and if rotted should be plowed under just before planting, otherwise several months before that time. The more litter used in the manure, the greater liability to loss of nitrogen. The use of bedding material free from decomposable organic matter is a means of protection against loss of nitrogen. As a matter of fact, many intelligent farmers long since reached the conclusion that manure is never worth any more than immediately after it is voided, and that the sooner it can be got onto the land the better. Of course, the sooner this is done the less the liability to loss of nitrogen, irrespective of the kind of bedding used.

Hint from an Auctioneer.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Long Missing Man Returns Home—Engineer Killed by Stray Bullet—Balloonist Escapes Accident—Unknown Person Attempts Murder.

Fifteen years ago George Thompson, a young farmer near Bynum, deserted his wife and children without cause or warning. It was rumored he was murdered, as a search failed to reveal any trace of him. His wife kept the farm and made a living for herself and children, never married or applied for divorce, revering his memory, but believing him dead. The other evening Thompson returned home and the reunion was a happy one. He says he has been in Indian territory ever since leaving. He refuses to give any explanation of his mysterious desertion of his family.

Truly Faithful Unto Death.

Near Reeds Station, Engineer W. H. McCarthy of a Lake Erie and Western freight train was shot and killed with a bullet supposed to have been a stray shot from some hunter in the woods through which the train was rushing. He did not release his hold on the throttle of the engine till he had shut off steam, called for brakes and informed the fireman what had happened.

Crowd Sees an Aeronaut Fall.

At Union City, a large crowd saw a young aeronaut escape by a narrow margin from being dashed to his death. Herbert Williams made his first ascension. When the balloon had gone up about 500 feet the gas began to escape and the balloon to fall. In its descent the balloon caught in some telegraph wires and Williams climbed out to a pole, down which he descended in safety.

Attempts a Double Murder.

A shooting, which may result in the death of two persons, occurred four miles west of Rushville. Mrs. Ruby Powell and William Searey were shot down by an unknown person, who used a shotgun, and Mrs. Elizabeth Veatch was painfully wounded. Three shots were fired.

Though there was a large number of other piano men present, and the competition was active, he got the plum. It was the fine piano that goes into Dr. Stamets' home. And the other dealers can see how it pays to advertise in the COURIER.

—There was a murder at an ice cream supper last week at Marion, Ill. It is not stated whether the quality of the ice cream cut any ice in this case, but we have seen ice cream that would make a person feel like committing a a crime.

—The first fatal accident on the Allen county court house occured yesterday when Lewis LeGraw, a laborer, was killed by falling from the attic to the third floor. A barrow full of mortar which he was wheeling across an opening fell on him, crushing his head.

—The South Bend Times says a local dentist recently had a cleaning up of his place and sent his old carpets, etc., to a Chicago firm that subjected them to a process, which caused the remittance to him of $17 as his share for the old gold, etc., discovered by the process resorted to. Old carpets in dentist's offices are more valuable than the new, Only a little gold or amalgam falls at a time, but it soon counts into money.

—This story of the latest confidence scheme for eecing the unsophisticated farmer is going the rounds of the country press: A man who represents himself as a preacher calls and asks to remain over night. Before the hour of retiring a young man and woman come along and ask if there is not a minister in the house who can perform a marriage ceremony. Of course there is. The young people join hands and the farmer and wife are asked to sign the marriage certificate as witnesses. The certificate afterwards turns up as a promissory note.

Dry Stereotyping.

In a new system of dry stereotyping, adapted to the smallest job or the largest paper, the "flong," which is the subject of the patent, is supplied in sheets, a piece of which, cut to size, is placed on the form and run through the press once, thus forming a matrix, which is lifted and taken at once to the casting box, no drying being required, thus saving a great deal of time, the cast being taken in two minutes or less from the time the sheet of "flong" is laid on the type. No beating is required, thus saving the type much wear and tear. A company has been formed to manufacture the "flong," which promises to meet with an immense demand.

Worn Bank Notes.

Every year the treasurer of the United States is called upon to redeem millions of bank notes which have become badly worn as a result of constant handling. During the fiscal year recently closed Treasurer Roberts gave new bills in exchange for old to the amount of $290,000,000, breaking the record of the last six years. This is an indication that with the return of prosperity money is in free circulation.

Terrible Explosion at Ashley

About ten o'clock last night the electric light plant at Ashley, recently sold by W. H. McIntyre to Engineer Van-Buskirk of the Wabash, was almost completely ruined buy the explosion of one of the boilers. At the time of the accident the engineer, a Mr. Dunfee, was sitting with his wife in the engine room, and when the explosion came they were nearly buried under tha debris. Both were quite badly injured, both of Mrs. Dunfee's limbs being fractured and other injuries sustained, and she is in a very serious condition Mr. Dunfee was more fortunate and will probably soon recover. It was indeed a wonder that both were not instantly killed. The fireman, whose name we did not learn, escaped serious injury.

The entire plant, which was one of the best in this part of the state, was wrecked and the building was almost completely razed to the ground. Both boilers were ruined, while the dynamos and other machinery were so badly damaged that they are practically worthless and the loss will reach several thousand nollars. The cause of the explosion has not been learned.

ANOTHER AWFUL ACCIDENT.

Miss Mary Kline Struck by a B. & O. Train and Killed.

One of those terrible grade crossing accidents which seem to be increasing in number throughout the country occurred about seven o'clock last evening at the point where the wagon road crosses the B. & O south of Woodlawn cemetery, resulting in the death of Miss Mary Kline, a maiden lady who resided with her father on a farm about three miles west of Spencerville and a sister of M. Kline, the south Main street grocer.

Miss Kline drove to Auburn yesterday and after doing some shopping visited with the family of her brother and at their solicitation remained for supper About 6:30 o'clock she started for home in her buggy, and less than an hour later Mr. Kline received a telephone message from Sol Barney, who was waiting for No 5 at the Junction, stating that she had been struck by a train at the Shugers crossing and killed.

When the third section of train No. 7, running extra and carrying excursionists home from Philadelphia, reached the Junction portions of a buggy were found on the engine pilot. The engineer remembere a sudden jar to the train about a mile east while running at a high rate of speed, and train was backed up to the crossing where the lifeless remains of Miss Kline were found, with the remainder of the badly wrecked vehicle. The engine had evidently struck the buggy squarely and reduced it to splinters, throwing its only occupant nearly one hundred feet ann through a wire fence. The horse, which was stripped of the harness, was evidently uninjured as it could not be found and doubtless ran away after the accident.

The body of Miss Kline was placed on the train and taken to the Junction, white it was identified by Mr. Barney and others. Undertaker McCord was called and upon expamination found that the body was terribly crushed, while cuts about the head, arms and limbs showed the great force of the collision. There is but little doubt that death was instantaneous and that the unfortunate woman had no thought of her impending danger. Mr. McCord at once prepared the remains for burial and later on they were taken to her home by the undertaker from Spencerville. The funeral, we understand, will be held tomorrow.

The deceased had resided in the county for a number of years and her sudden and awful death came as a great shock to her family and friends. She was a most estimable lady and was about fifty-six years of age. No blame is attached to the engineer of the train and the verdict of Coroner Campbell, who was called soon after the accident and investigated the case, will porbably be that Miss Kline's death was purely occidental.

Angola Fire.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER

ANGOLA, IND., Sept 6, 1899.

About nine o'clock last night, fire broke out in Jerome Morse's livery stable, and in a few minutes the building owned by Mrs. Obe Lease, was a mass of flames. The fire leaped across the street to the east, and soon John W. Nyce's big carriage works and blacksmith shop were on fire and were totally destroyed. Loss on livery barn about $2,000. John W. Nyce's loss is between $5,000 and $6,000 with $1,000 insurance on stock and $900 on building. The fire originated in the hay loft by the upsetting of a lantern in the hands of Claude Boggis, who went up after some straw. Our fire department responded promptly and kept the fire from spreading farther. Several buildings around caught fire, but the heroic work of the citizens saved them. The whole town turned out to see the big blaze. Just as the fire was under control, one of the hardest electric windstorms that ever visited Angola came up. Had it come up a half hour sooner the whole southeast part of town would have been swept away. The burned district is on first and second blocks east of public square.

A Brutal Act.

Butler people were treated to an exhibition of brutality yesterday that doubtless goes ahead of anything ever seen in that town. It seems that a young picture man, here some time ago with a party of agents, had done some soliciting in that line for two fellows in that place and failing to reach a settlement had sued them for his wages. Yesterday afternoon they met him on the street when a fight ensued. The young man was rapidly getting the better of his two antagonists and it is said would have whipped them both had they not been re-enforced by a big bull dog It is claimed one of the men "sicked" the dog onto the young man, but be that as it may the young man was terribly bitten by the vicious animal before he could be rescued by the town marshal and bystanders. The two fellows were arrested and fined $23 each in a justice court for assault and battery. Two other charges were filed against them which were to be heard today and it is more than probable that they will find that kind of fighting very expensive. The young man who was bitten ought to have good grounds for heavy damages.

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang ye, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER VII.

There has been many interruptions in the usually regular meeting for a few days past, but a good deal of business has been done at the Band Stand for all that.

The gossip branched off into the country at one forenoon session, and several of them seemed in doubt about a provision said to be in the state constitution, to the effect that one man cannot hold "two offices of profit and honor" "How then does it come?" said the Retired Farmer, "that G. I. Patterson is allowed to do that very thing?" "He aint doin' that very thing," said the man on the seat across the stand, "he haint got any office at all." Then a discussion followed and it came out that Mr. Patterson is School Land Appraiser for the southwest district and also a member of the County Council. The former office was news to most of the sitting members, so they went into executive session. When the doors were opened, it had been decided that all the "profit or honor" in either office wouldn't hurt any body, and the committee that had been thought of to wait on Gib, to see about it, was abandoned.

They concluded this, however, was not as good a joke as the one Wils. Dancer got off on himself a while ago. It was something like this:

Mr. Dancer had advanced money to build the Lockwood church, and finally had to take the building for the debt. So, of course he was sole owner of a church. On one occasion, the minister noticing that Wils was very active and generally present at the meetings, asked, "Mr. Dancer, do you belong to church?" "No," said Dancer. "the church belongs to me." And the preacher caught on. But Mr. Dancer, however, is now figuring to get rid of his church, and would have done so recently but the wife of one of the parties interested refuses to sign the deed. In the meantime, the church belongs to Dancer and Dancer don't belong to the church, though a pretty good, all around fellow.

Much of the discussion about the case of the Bills woman from Butler is better fitted for "executive session" than for newspaper articles. But the joke Henry Baker got on himself, when he confided some of the secrets to "Geo. Quince," was worth a good laugh, when Henry found it was not George he was talking to but Ott Baxter, one of the woman's attorneys. Henry nearly fainted. But he furnished a part of a chapter for these columns. And yet, neither Henry nor George is aware of all the good names that are likely to figure in the next case that comes from the well stocked fish ponds of Butler.

At the second session this week, a brief half hour was spent in a pro and con discussion of the original cause of the spite which the Auburn correspondent for the Garrett Herald, seems to hold against Dave Waters. It was the unanimous opinion at the close of the conference, that the trouble would never have arisen, had Dave's establishment been located a half dozen blocks away.

Here, the Auctioneer made a motion to adjourn, which not being debateable is never popular at the Stand, for the members like to talk and they had reached a good subject so they dispersed.

For The Plaintiff

The replevin case before Esquire Walter yesterday, involving the possession of a heifer, was decided in favor of the plaintiff Mrs. Sodtman. A few days ago W. C. McNabb bought the heifer from Mrs. Sodtman's father-in-law, who claimed to own it. It appeared from the evidence that the daughter-in-law had a prior claim on the animal, having raised it from a calf, and the jury decided against Mr. McNabb. Luckily the latter was able to stop payment on the check given to the senior Sodtman for the heifer, but the costs will amount to a neat sum. There may be further developments in the case.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

Indiana W. C T. U. Convention, Marion, October 6 to 10.

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., November 20 27.

Among the many significant reform movements at the present time, of which many are the product of this century, and a guaranty of the light and happiness for the century to come, there is undoubtedly none of greater importance than the temperance reform.

And among the many clubs, societies and organizations of various kinds that have been introduced in the present century, there is none that has been a greater blessing to humanity, nor will continue to be, than the organization known as "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

For this organization, upon which the safety of this nation rests, which is clearing the way for a rapid progress of civilization, is the brave and noble hearted American woman to be thanked: The mighty woman whose constancy is never shaken, whose character is never changed, and whose kindness is unbounded. The woman who is most ready to enter, and most reluctant to leave the field of misery and wretchedness; and who voluntarily wipes from the dim eye the tear of anguish. This woman, as seen moving within the boundaries of her sphere of activity, like a divine radiance, her tender care and compassion hover about the miserable victims that have yielded to the seducing influence of this degenerating poison.

This blessed influence has not ceased, but day by day grows stronger. This influence of the "White Ribbon" movement in this country reveals its power in this Christian civilization, and every woman who has the opportunity to speak a word for the cause of temperance should rejoice—rejoice to stand in the ranks of the army that is the first to have a woman as a leader, a woman as great as the cause for which she stands. When the battle is fought the victory won, and the "White Banner" floats above the union, as the 'Stars and Stripes" are hoisted in honor of our early heroes; so the "White Banner" shall point the future generations to that brilliant star. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The Modern Woodmen.

The Modern Woodmen turned out for drill last evening, and were something of a surprise to our people, many of whom did not seem to know we had such a body of uniformed and drilled men. Their uniform is very unusual in its make up, but looks neat, and shows off well in the drill. Their evolutions are different in some ways from that of any other order, and they are very skillful in doing them. Speaking of this, but few of our people know this body of drilled men took two prizes at the recent meeting at Fort Wayne. They got the fine flag they carry for turning out the biggest number of men, and then they won $35 cash for being the best drilled lodge on the ground. And now, they are going to work for some of the big prizes at the coming general meetings. They are led and drilled by Herman Lobmiller.

Fatal Accident at Cedar.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER.

CEDAR, IND., Sept. 7, 1899:—A fatal accident occurred at this place last evening about 7 o'clock when Callion, the eleven year old son of Henry Zern, lost his life in a peculiar manner. The lad was leading a horse to water and concluded to ride the animal. He attempted to mount the horse from a pile of logs in the mill yard, when one of the logs rolled, throwing the boy to the ground and crushing him so badly that he died about two hours later. The parents of the unfortunate boy are prostrated by their terrible affliction.

THE CORN BINDER

We went out to Dr. Ford's farm east of town yesterday afternoon, in company with a number of gentlemen who wanted to see how the McCormick Corn Binder would work. This was being handled by W. B. Brown, who is a general agent for the McCormick company, though the local agents, are Culbertson and Boland. So many difficulties have surrounded the working of any machinery that has to handle corn and cornstalks, that unusual interest attaches to trials of any of these machines. We found the corn very heavy and a little lodged, as Dr. Ford's land is among the best for rich soil and condition, in the county. The crop is grown by Bert Mochamer, who seems to be a success at farming. His team pulled the corn binder, but was driven by W. B. Brown, and it was wonderful to see them start in on a row of corn and go steadily down to the other end, then around and back to the starting place taking the row clean. The stalks were cut off near the root, carried back still standing upright, and held firmly till the binding apparatus tied a length of binder twine firmly about them, and then as if the machine knew its work was done, the big, green heavy sheaf was cast out and to one side, falling with its top to the left. As we said, it was wonderful, that a machine so simple, could do so much with such heavy unwieldy stuff as growing corn. It caught and worked into the bundle nearly every down stalk and but few ears were torn off. These bundles are generally allowed to dry a day or two before being made into shocks as they are so heavy to handle. But if weather is threatening they are shocked at once. The writer is not very familiar with farm work, but what we saw of this machine satisfied us it would do all claimed for it, and that it will soon be in common use, taking the place of hand labor that is very hard and undesirable. It was the opinion of several farmers present, however, as far as we heard them express any opinion, that it was a successful machine every way. Besides Mr. Mochamer, there were present, D. D. Metcalf, C. L. Baird, Wm. Ashelman, Dr. Ford and others. Also Eugene McDowell, T. A. Carter and J. C. Weeks, the three last named being actively engaged in the sale of farm machinery though we do not know as they are agents for any corn binder. Mr. Brown has sold a number of these machines recently especialy in the neighborhood of Helmer and Topeka. They will cut and bind about eight acres a day, and judging from the amount of ground gone over in a couple of hours yesterday, we think it will do that much easily.

After leaving the field Thursday the Deering agent said to H. C. Shull. "I wish you would notice the side draft on the McCormick," and when it was mentioned to W. B. Brown he took off the neck-yoke and asked Mr. Shull to drive the machine; after he had driven about ten rods Mr. Brown said: "Stop, I want to go back and get the neck-yoke." Mr. Shull had not discovered that he was driving without a neck-yoke. They then drove forty rods across the field without the neck-yoke, and with no inconvenience, thus nailing another Deering lie.

On Friday the Osborne pulled into the same field and showed their sand and also their inability to tie a half-size bundle and deliver from the machine which was later pulled back to its former resting place, while Mr. Shull did the only sensible thing a man could do after seeing the Deering, Osborne and McCormick work—he bought the McCormick though he was offered the other so-called corn binders at a little over half price.

In the trial again yesterday Mr. Brown took off the neck-yoke and demonstrated to the crowd that the McCormick Corn Binder, like all their machines, are built right, work right, wear right, and are all right handed.

That Conundrum.

The Steuben Republican asked: Why were the DeKalb county people who attended old settlers' day here like Dewey? After waiting a week it gave its own idea of an answer, which was: "Because they were a long time getting home." The COURIER can get a good deal closer than that. It was because they were glad to get home.

ROW OVER CAPE NOME CLAIM.

Three Hundred Alleged Trespassing Miners Are Arrested.

The steamer Laurada of Cuban filibustering fame arrived at Seattle from St. Michael's, Alaska, with 200 passengers from Dawson and Cape Nome, and a small amount of gold dust. Purser Coup says he had $50,000 worth in his custody. Cape Nome passengers report that a few days before they left 300 miners were placed under arrest for trespassing. The arrest was made by Lieut. Craigie and a detachment of ten men on the complaint of a company which claims to own a strip on the beach between low and mean high tide. The miners were held under arrest but a few hours. Lieut. Craigie saw that it would be impossible to provide for such a large number and ordered their release, notifying the company to seek redress in court. The strip in dispute has never been officially surveyed. S. R. Colvin, who sold his claim at Cape Nome for $35,000, says men mining on the beach are taking out from $4 to $40 to the man.

EMPLOYMENT AND BETTER WAGES.

Explanation of the Continued Large Demand by Individual Consumers.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The astonishing feature is the magnitude of demand, notwithstanding prices which would ordinarily check it. In products directly consumed by individuals the larger employment and better wages of the working force give explanation. Efforts to meet the demand call for more stores, manufacturing works and machinery and facilities for transportation, as if every man's wages were in part diverted to build up the nation's machinery of manufacturing and distribution. The occasion promises quick profits, the building is largely for the future, and it goes on in spite of unusual prices. Sales of wool have been moderate, 6,328,700 pounds for the week, and for five weeks 42,005,890 pounds, of which 35,459,290 pounds were domestic. Failures for the week have been 141 in the United States, against 171 last year, and 25 in Canada, against 22 last year."

ARGENTINA IS PROSPERING.

Minister Buchanan Sees Opportunities to Increase Our Trade.

William I. Buchanan, minister to the Argentine Republic, recently arrived from Buenos Ayres, says: "The prosperity of the Argentine Republic is increasing year by year. The two great products of the Argentine Republic—wool and cattle—have shown a tremendous growth, both in quantity and quality, during the last two or three years, and in these products the republic has become an important factor. The conditions of the country are reflected in the appreciation of the Argentine currency. When I went there first the currency was so depreciated that the equivalent of a hundred gold dollars was 430 paper dollars, but now the same number of gold dollars will buy only 230 paper dollars. In every way the outlook in Argentina is bright and encouraging. Gen. Roca, the present head of the Government, is a progressive and excellent man; the people admire him and there are no internal dissensions of any kind. It would be to the advantage, I think, of the United States to increase her dealings with the Argentine Republic, because I do not think the people of this country quite realize how cheaply the staple products of that country are raised."

GREAT CROP OF CORN.

PRESENT INDICATIONS DENOTE A BIG YIELD.

Should Conditions Prove Favorable the Crop May Reach the Enormous Total of 2,350,000,000 Bushels, Far in Excess of the Mark Set in 1896.

	Bushels.
Commercial estimate of corn crop	2,350,000,000
Government August estimate	2,148,000,000
Record corn crop (1896)	2,285,000,000
Kansas State estimate	400,000,000
Kansas record crop (1896)	247,000,000
Nebraska State estimate	350,000,000
Nebraska record crop (1896)	298,000,000

Will this year's be a record corn crop, is about the only doubtful point now left as to the great American harvest. It is assumed that it is to be a 2,000,000,000 bushel crop, but there have been four such already; in 1896, when the total was 2,283,000,000 bushels; in 1895, when it was 2,151,000,000; in 1891, when the figures reached 2,060,000,000, and in 1889, when the crop was 2,112,000,000.

It has been dry and hot in the West for a fortnight, and it kept getting hotter and dryer each day until the corn people began at the close of last week to fear that the prospect of a record breaker in their line was to be lost. The weather interest in the West just now centers around this.

Has there been drought damage enough to the tasseled maize to spoil the prospect of a new figure, a new mark on the Western possibilities in the greatest feed crop of the world, the one which last year brought the farmers of the West over $550,000,000, which always greatly exceeds in value the wheat crop, and which is the one crop America raises for the world and in which it has no competitor? Of the 2,359,000,000 bushels of corn raised last year the world over, the United States gathered about 2,000,000,000 bushels.

The Kansas authorities figure that the Sunflower State is this year to have about 400,000,000 bushels, and the Kansas corn is made, has been in large part cut. Nothing can now spoil the Kansas figure. The Government officials, always conservative in their estimates, put the Kansas yield at 346,000,000 bushels. Its record up to the present was made in 1896, when there was a harvest of 247,000,000 bushels.

Nebraska is pretty nearly as far along as Kansas, some of its corn being cut in the south. Besides Nebraska has been well favored with rain, even while some of the other States have been suffering. The Nebraska State authorities figure their corn crop at 350,000,000 bushels. The Government crop report Aug. 10 put the Nebraska at 300,000,000. But even this conservative figure makes a new record. Nebraska's greatest crop was in 1896, when its total was 298,000,000 bsuhels.

The hugeness of this year's corn promise is best shown by the official Washington estimates in bushels on the seven great corn States, compared with the two previous years:

	1899.	1898.	1897.
Ohio..	90,000,000	103,000,000	92,000,000
Ind...	120,000,000	129,000,000	110,000,000
Ill...	219,000,000	200,000,000	233,000,000
Mo...	179,000,000	155,000,000	172,000,000
Kas..	346,000,000	133,000,000	162,000,000
Iowa.	219,000,000	235,000,000	220,000,000
Neb..	300,000,000	159,000,000	241,000,000
Tot.	1,473,000,000	1,134,000,000	1,230,000,000

These are the most conservative figures, and they compare with big corn years—1898 and 1897. It is assumed in commercial circles that the Government's estimate on the whole corn area, 81,607,000 acres, is about 3,000,000 acres too low, and that the crop will be over 2,350,000,000 bushels for the whole country, unless the present dry weather or some very severe cold snap should in the next two weeks spoil the promise.

It is a risk of only a few days, a fortnight at the outside. Already half the corn area is beyond the danger point. In another week three-quarters of the whole will be made, and in a fortnight the entire crop will be secure.

It is not remarkable, consequently, that the interest in the corn belt weather should at this juncture be intense, nor remarkable that the corn speculator should be especially apprehensive of the possibilities. It is the momentous risk of the day, of the greatest import to the entire country; to the farmer, whose interest is direct; to the cattle man, the railroader, the merchant and the banker, whose interests are hardly less at stake. Even Wall street knows that its values might be cut sensationally over night by an accident in the next few days to the corn crop.

THE CORN CROP.

—Chicago Record.

result of the elaborate efforts of the local veterans. Eighteen water lines ran through the camp, with sunken barrels placed at short intervals for the thirsty visitors. Two mess tents, 160x60 feet in size; ice cream and sutlers' tents were situated at the western extremity of the camp. Telephone and telegraph wires ran overhead to the exact center of the camp, where the instruments were situated, and where the postoffice was. Near by was the bureau of information tent, with headquarters and officers' mess tents above on the brow of the hill. Ten tents for the medical corps and five large hospital tents were at the eastern edge of the camp, sheltered from the sun by a clump of spreading trees. Incandescent lights were suspended up and down the lines of tents, while at the intersections of the streets or passageways were placed the blazing camp fires, where the old veterans gathered before turning in at night and fought their battles over again. An arch was at the west of the camp surmounted by flag poles forty-five feet high and the entire structure, built to resemble stone work, was covered with flags and G. A. R. insignia.

President Watches Thirty Thousand Veterans Marching.

Tuesday was the big day of the Grand Army encampment at Philadelphia and the city was alive at an early hour. The presence of President McKinley increased the interest, and his drive over the route of the parade aroused the greatest enthusiasm among the throngs in the streets.

The head of the procession moved at 10 o'clock. The distance covered was five miles. Independence Hall was passed during the march, and caps were lifted and colors dipped by the veterans. The chorus of 3,000 school children occupied a portion of the grand stand on the north side of the city hall and sung patriotic airs as the veterans passed. Post No. 1 from Rockford, Ill., the oldest post in the Grand Army, headed the line.

Disabled veterans rode in carriages, following the department of Pennsylvania at the end of the line. In order came the departments of Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maine, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, Potomac, Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Nebraska, Michigan, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Washington, Alaska and South Dakota. Thirty-five thousand men were in line.

At no celebration since the centennial has this city seen the crowds which lined the streets along which the veterans passed. The Avenue of Fame, with its snow-white columns and festoons of bunting and laurel, was the favorite viewpoint.

One of the most interesting features of the encampment was Camp Sexton at the Belmont mansion in Fairmount park, where 8,000 veterans occupied tents. Standing upon the top of Belmont looking toward Philadelphia the best view of the camp could be secured. Down below stretched the great field of tents. Behind them rolled the Schuylkill—picturesque there, perhaps, more than at any other spot, and beyond the banks rose the city of Philadelphia framed between the two walls of green as in some giant picture. The veterans had everything that could possibly be conducive to comfort at their disposal. There was no question of roughing it, the ordinary vicissitude of camp life having been eliminated as a

ASSUMES NEW PHASE.

DREYFUS CASE NEARS INTERNATIONAL DANGER LINE.

Labori Makes a Startling Move by Requesting the Court to Call Foreign Diplomats as Witnesses—A Reputed Scion of Servian Royalty Testifies.

Monday's session of the Dreyfus court martial opened rather badly for Captain Dreyfus, as a surprise was sprung upon the defense in the advent of an Austrian political refugee, Eugene Cernuschi, who came out with a flat-footed denunciation of the accused, which, even though it may eventually be proved a pure fairy tale, is bound for the moment to exercise a malignant influence upon the French people. Cernuschi, as soon as he had delivered his testimony and Labori had asked to have him put on oath behind closed doors in order that he might be punished, if guilty of perjury, left the court room and was not seen again.

Cernuschi's testimony, which was in the form of a letter to the president of the court martial, Col. Jouaust, was most unequivocal. He claimed that on three distinct occasions, twice in France and once in Geneva, he was told by a high-placed foreign officer that Dreyfus had communicated treasonable documents to a foreign power. In the third instance Cernuschi said that the officer showed him documents emanating from Dreyfus and that this officer left France hurriedly two days prior to the arrest of Captain Dreyfus.

The allusion was evidently to Col. Schwartzkoppen, the military attache of the German embassy in Paris in 1894, whose movements were coincident with those described as the movements of the officer of Cernuschi's deposition.

The introduction of a foreigner as a witness for the prosecution gave Labori an opportunity to submit the most important request he has made throughout the trial. Labori announced his intention, in view of the step taken by the prosecution in calling foreign evidence, to ask that inquiry should be made through the regular diplomatic channels as to whether the documents mentioned in the bordereau were actually communicated, and, if so, by whom. This involves an application to the German Government. The application would mean the lengthening of the trial for several weeks.

A Vienna dispatch asserts that Eugene Cernuschi, who testified at the Dreyfus court martial at Rennes, France, is not connected with the Servian royal family, as claimed. His real name is Haducek. He is very eccentric and some doctors have pronounced him a lunatic.

M. Labori Tuesday demanded that the court summon Col. Schneider, Col. Schwartzkoppen, Col. Panizzardi and other foreigners to testify for the defense and prove directly that Dreyfus had never had relations with foreign powers. The fact was also brought out that documents had been communicated to the president of the court without the knowledge of the defense. M. Labori made a strong protest, asserting that the great error of the first court martial was being committed over again.

The first part of Tuesday's session of the court martial was secret. When the doors were opened for the public session, M. Labori read a brief statement to the effect that it was the consensus of opinion of the defense that while they had hitherto not called foreigners to testify, the Government having set the example, they would no longer refrain from doing so.

Then, returning to President Jouaust, Labori said: "We know the particularly delicate position of all concerned in this matter, but we must ask that you also summon witnesses outside of France for us. We want Schneider, Schwartzkoppen, Panizzardi and others to prove directly and emphatically that Dreyfus never had relations with foreign powers and never communicated to them the pieces mentioned in the bordereau.

"We also ask that the Government secure through diplomatic channels documents bearing on the bordereau." Maj. Carriere for the prosecution protested against the moral and material difficulties of such action, and said it would not assist the defense anyhow. President Jouaust reserved his decision.

The court martial Tuesday heard the complete story of Esterhazy's confession from the lips of Reporter Bassett, who was sent by the Paris Matin to London for the purpose of securing the interview. The witness testified to the already familiar story of how and why the bordereau was written by the man now in exile. Esterhazy was quoted as saying that he was ordered to commit the crime by Col. Sandherr.

This brought a protest in most theatrical style from Maj. Carriere, the Government commissary. "I protest," he cried, "in the name and memory of Col. Sandherr, against the insinuations introduced against him." M. Labori, however, ignored this protest, which he styled "a ridiculous pretension."

FRANCE FEARS RIOTS.

Dreyfus Verdict Is Expected to Cause Disorder.

As the end of the Dreyfus court martial trial comes within sight the French Government is beginning to display a fear that the verdict may give rise to troubles and orders have just been received by two regiments of infantry and one cavalry regiment, already within hail of Rennes, to hold themselves in readiness to march on the town at the first sign of disorder, to occupy all strategical points and to repress manifestations in their inception.

The anti-Dreyfus organs, by their anti-foreign articles, have already singled out foreigners as enemies of the country, and there is little doubt that foreign journalists will be the first victims of the violence of the mob—not so much Anglo-Saxons as Austrian, German and Russian Jews, who form a majority of the press representation of their respective countries.

Returns to Washington with Well-Formed Ideas.

A Washington special says there is good authority for the statement that the President has returned to Washington with the general ideas uppermost in his mind as to his future course in relation to the new dependencies.

The Philippines—Civil government by three commissioners to supplant military rule immediately after the rebellion is crushed.

Cuba—Continued military control until it is determined by means of a general election whether the inhabitants want independence or annexation. If independence, the new government selected will be recognized by the United States and will be given encouragement and every opportunity to stablish its stability. If annexation, the President will be governed by the sentiment of American citizens, as it may then exist.

Porto Rico—Civil government of the territorial form, similar to that which prevails in Arizona.

Hawaii—Territorial form of government, as recommended by the Hawaiian commission, and as provided for in a measure now pending in Congress.

Daleville temperance people are about to be outwitted in their fight of long standing to prevent saloons from entering their town as a result of a trick. Richard Reynolds made the regulation application for a license and the publication, as was expected by him, brought the customary majority remonstrances signed by 234 taxpayers. In the meantime James Brubaker applied for a license to serve drinks in the Reynolds room, making the advertisement required by law in a Muncie trade journal. The publication was overlooked by Daleville people until it is now too late to remonstrate before the meeting of the commissioners' court.

Charivari Ends in a Tragedy.

While a party of young men were giving a charivari serenade for John W. Cannady and his bride, Miss Lettie Boyd, at Odon, Floyd Kinman was fatally shot. The noise of drums and tin pans was not enough for some one in the party, who fired a revolver. The bullet entered Kinman's abdomen.

Brazil Coal Miners Strike.

At Brazil, 300 miners employed by the Keeler Coal Company went out on a strike because the boss at the mine refused to allow them to use powder purchased at a store that did not belong to the coal company. The miners say they bought the powder 50 cents cheaper on the keg than sold by the company.

A LITTLE WOMAN.

Perhaps you never knew her? She
Was only known to those who love her
And still revere her memory,
Pure as the stars that shine above her.

By God's strange providence bereft
Of father, sister, friends and brothers,
And homeless, joyless ever left
She freely gave her life for others.

If grief she had she did not tell;
We dared not ask—we never knew it;
Her heart was like a hidden well,
Deep—sealed—and only God saw through it.

On errands sweet with mercy, swift
She moved—her smile of joy the token;
Her willing hands the weight would lift
From many a heart, despairing—broken!

And many a life bowed down with shame
Beneath her tender touch grew human;
And lips that prayed not breathed her name
And said: "God bless that little woman!"

The day she died they came to me
And said: "No boon would we deny her;
Some word above her grave must be,
Now that the Lord has called her higher."

I wept—but did not weep alone,
Because my grief was theirs in common;
Said I: "Place nothing on the stone
Save this: 'Here lies a Little Woman!'"

HER FAITH.

"I can't stay, an' wont. 'Tain't in human natur'," muttered Ann Friend. "Always the same! Sunshine for others, shadows for me!"

"Where's the slate, honey? Where's the slate?" piped a quivering voice, as Ann stepped into the dim kitchen and began to bustle about energetically. "We mun cross it off, honey; we mun cross it off. 'Tis the 21st to-day, and the boy comes home on the 26th, bless the Lord!"

"Here, 'tis, mother-in-law. Bide quiet a bit while I sets the kettle on the hob."

"Five days, five days," echoed the old woman. "We mun be busy, honey, and get the place set clean, and the sheets aired; and I'm thinking, Ann, if you was to put the things ready for me I might make the ginger cake he used to set such store by, eh?"

"Now, mother-in-law, I'll not have you messing around and making yourself ill." Ann spoke with decision. "What's good enough for us is good enough for him."

"But, Ann—'tis my son John—'tis your own man, Ann!"

Ann's face grew harder and harder as she left the kitchen and went upstairs to her bedroom.

"I can't stay, nor I won't!" said Ann Friend, suddenly, as she stood looking out of the window. "Nobody could expect me to stay. She won't care so long as she's got him, and he won't care so long as he's got his liberty and a roof over his head."

Bending down she drew a box from under the bed and began to pack into it the contents of the one chest of drawers that stood in the room.

At the bottom of the last drawer she came upon a little bundle of baby's clothes, and for a moment the hardness of her face softened while she unfolded each tiny garment and examined it carefully. Then the cloud returned, and the clothes were once more tied into a bundle and returned to the now empty drawer.

"'Tis well she died," she thought to herself. "'Tis well she can't be ashamed of her father. I'll leave them there; he'll like maybe to see how tall she grew."

Four years ago Ann Friend would have told you that she was one of the happiest women in the whole village, and the village itself would not have have disputed the fact. Yet in two short years the happiness fled, the husband was a disgraced man, and Ann, whose good temper was proverbial, knew herself to have changed into a soured, hard woman.

The inhabitants of the little village where Ann had been born and bred said among themselves that Mrs. Friend was a rare good woman and had borne the disgrace of her husband's imprisonment as few women would have borne it.

They never knew the rage that took possession of proud Ann Friend when the shadow of disgrace fell upon her home. They never knew the bitter contempt that filled her heart when she thought of the father of her child working out his sentence in the neighboring prison.

"If you are innocent, prove it," was his wife's thought, but the thought was never put into words, for Ann was one of those strange characters whose thoughts are worse than their actions.

The mother believed in her son's word and counted the days for his return; the wife allowed her to believe that she did likewise. Some of the neighbors believed also in John's innocence; the wife held her peace, and they accounted her loyal.

Every day Ann determined to break down her long reserve—to tell the old woman that she, John's wife, would rather die than be there in person to welcome him home, yet each day saw the momentous words unspoken.

At last the morning of the 26th arrived. The explanatory letter was written and pinned on the pincushion; the box, corded and addressed, stood in the outhouse on the handcart she intended wheeling to the nearest station; the old mother had been dressed in her best Sunday gown and cap; the coffee stood ready on the hob, and still the silence of two years had not been broken.

"I may as well see how prison's agreed with him," thought Ann, as she looked at the clock and saw it was just about 7:30, and then felt irritated with the consciousness that this thought had been behind all her actions for the last two hours.

With a sullen face Ann left the cottage and took a short cut through the fields to where, standing on a low, firclad hill, she could look down unperceived on the roads below. There were two roads—the broad white road from the distant town that held the prison, and which wound its way onward to the next large town, and the curved, narrow lane that met it and struck downward on the left to the little village of Frant, passing the Friends' cottage on its way.

Ann knew that prisoners were released from Newham jail at 8 o'clock in the morning. She knew that John must come to where the roads crossed. After one look at the disgraced man she would have time to run home and start with her box in the opposite direction before he could reach the cottage, so she stood there and waited, and was angry with herself for waiting—angry because the minutes went so slowly, then angry because they had gone so fast, when a solitary figure appeared walking in the center of the road, makit suddenly seem broad, white and cheerless.

The man, for it was a man, walked slowly, hesitatingly. He felt his way with a stick, as if he was blind.

Yes, it was John; but why did he walk like that, instead of swinging along in his old hearty manner? Perhaps he felt ashamed. Serve him right if he did.

He came nearer and nearer, and, as she saw that he had a green shade over his eyes, the color left her cheeks, and, forgetting to hide herself as hitherto, she went to the extreme edge of the little hillock and looked down intently.

When the man came to the crossroads he stopped and stood facing down the narrow lane for full five minutes.

It was a poor, pitiful sight upon which the sunshine shone—the poor, maimed face, with lurid smallpox marks and swollen features. To some it would have been a repulsive sight; it brought but a hungry, yearning look into the eyes looking down upon it.

And then, slowly, deliberately, the man turned away from the lane, stepped again into the center of the road, and continued his way.

"My God! he is going away—he is not coming home!" gasped Ann; and, forgetful alike of her wrongs, her resolutions, she tore down the steep bank, rushed after the stumbling figure, caught the man by the arm, and cried:

"John, John, you have taken the wrong turning! This is the way home, dear!"

"You see, my lass," said John Friend, leaning on his wife's strong arm, "the doctor told me I was a sad sight, and I thought perhaps you would not know when I was a-coming out, and I'd go into Gorrick for a spell, till my hair had grown and my eyes and face were a bit better; but you was always a good wife, lass; and how I should have got through these two years without knowing as you believed I hadn't done it, I don't know. You was always a good home."

And the innocence Ann failed to believe in when John Friend was hale and hearty she believes in now that he is helpless and disfigured.—London Telegraph.

Curious Calvary Clover Bud.

A most remarkable little plant, which is exciting not a little attention among plant lovers, is the calvary clover (medicago echinus). Though generally supposed to be a native of Palestine, this pretty and curious little plant will live and grow freely in the somewhat smoky atmosphere of Chicago.

Admirers of this plant say that to produce healthy and thriving plants it is necessary to sow the seed on Good Friday, while the more unimaginative say that some time during the spring will do just as well.

When the little leaves of the calvary clover first appear above ground each division of the leaf has a deep red spot like freshly split blood upon it, which lasts for some weeks and finally fades away.

The three leaflets composing each leaf stand erect during the day in the form of a cross, with the head in position and arms extended, but as the sun begins to set and evening to draw on the tiny arm leaflets are brought together and the top leaflet, or head, is bowed over them.

SCIENTIFIC FROG FARMING.

Increased Demand in Cities Has Given the Business an Impetus.

Bull frog farming is becoming a recognized industry in Indiana. Within the last few weeks the new branch of culture has been established in many sections of the State on most extensive basis. Farmers have found that the frog is commanding a ready market and brings prices that cause the farmer to open his eyes.

Frog farming is being reduced to a scientific basis. The farmers have already found that not every frog that croaks during the hours of the night has a commercial value. It is only the American bullfrog, whose croak comes at long-measured intervals and sounds like a grand "amen" above all of the other croakings that has a commercial value.

The new farmer has also acquired a scientific knowledge on bagging his crop. Any man who has attempted to catch a frog knows that it is not the easiest thing in the world. Science, however, has solved the problem and the farmer goes up and picks his frog off his perch just as though he was an ear of corn on a stalk.

The growing demand in cities for frog hams has created this industry in a marvelously short time. In all first-class restaurants in cities frog hams have become as fixed a delicacy for the menu as any other of the food stuffs. For a long time this demand was filled by boys and young men, who went out and gathered the frogs, toads and everything they could get hold of. Now there are many frog farms scattered over Indiana. Farmers have found that their swamp lands, which have been considered worthless, have great value if they are sown in bullfrogs in the fall. Streams running through their lands are even better for the cultivation of the frog, and if that stream has marshes on each side and reeds and a mill dam and some picturesque points it seems to have a decided additional value.

Frogs of the best grade—big American bullfrogs—now command all the way from 60 cents to $1 a dozen, according to the market where they are offered for sale. The frog farmer should be able to catch all the way from 100 to 200 a night, or 1,000 a week, and put them on the market. There are some Indiana farms turning out such crops. This represents a big amount of money. The farmer is at practically no expense after he gets his farm well stocked.

The scientific method of bagging the crop is the result of an Indiana man's ingenuity. He is Thomas Farrer, of Shelbyville, who perhaps knows more on the subject of practical frogology than does any other man in the Mississippi valley. For some years Farrer was in the habit of going to the wilds of Arkansas annually on hunting and fishing expeditions. He discovered, while out at night carrying a blazing pine knot, that the frogs would cease croaking as the light passed, but would not jump into the water. The thought occurred to him that perhaps they were charmed or delighted with the light, as seals are said to be with music. The thought of trying to catch one of the big frogs that abound in that section was carried into execution, the result being that with the aid of a light he had no great trouble in picking them up. He found that the brighter the light the easier his task was and the more deeply hypnotized was the frog.

This began the evolution of the present calcium light effect which he gets by taking an ordinary new tin bucket, shifting the handle to the side and putting a lantern inside of it. The bottom and sides act as a reflector, and with the shifted handle it is easily carried and the light thrown full glare on the frog. When it hits his eyes he is asleep and he knows nothing more until he is safely inside of a bag which the hunter swings around his neck.

CATCHING FROGS AT NIGHT.

Quite Content with the Sentence.

"Your worship," said the wily solicitor, who was defending the stalwart prisoner in the dock, "you cannot possibly convict my client of housebreaking. I submit, sir, with all deference, that neither morally nor legally can you convict him. I will tell you why.

"Mr. Sikes, here, as the evidence clearly proves, did not break into any house at all. He found the parlor window open, as the witnesses admit, and all he did was to put in his right arm and remove some unimportant articles. Now, sir, Mr. Sikes' arm is not he himself, and I fail to see how you can punish the whole individual for an offense committed by only one of his limbs."

"Very well, sir," said the cautious Solomon of the bench, "I have heard of a similar defense before to-day, so I find the prisoner's arm guilty, and sentence it to six months' imprisonment. The gentleman himself can accompany it or not, as he chooses. Mr. Clerk, record the sentence."

Then Mr. Sikes smiled a fourteen-inch smile, and the plan of the defense became apparent, as he quietly proceeded to unscrew his guilty cork arm, and leave it in the custody of the court.

WOMAN'S REALM

SHOULD WOMEN PROPOSE?

IN the Eastern States they—the people have taken up the discussion of "Should women propose?" These are the clever sentiments expressed by Mrs. Leslie Carter in one of the papers:

"Women do propose, I think. Sometimes they do so without knowing it themselves—if they are very guileless.

"Generally they know pretty well what they are about, however—but the man doesn't.

"He thinks he tosses the apple to whomsoever he will, and he is seldom aware of the jog to his elbow given by the waiting Venus.

"There are so many ways in which a woman can indicate to a man the state of his own mind—not hers. A woman is always a suggestive possibility. A man's action is simply the reflex of a woman's will.

"If a man does not propose, rest assured the woman does not want him to, or else he is the stronger character.

"Yet a woman's strength is in her weakness, as bards of old discovered long ago. A man must think himself master of the situation, even if he isn't—and he seldom is, unless the woman lets him see how she cares for him.

"It really makes little difference who does the proposing, except for form's sake. It is a mutual affair, and a woman has a perfect right to take the initiative if she chooses. But her innate womanliness or coquetry usually influences her to use the indirect methods which I have indicated."

Century Bars to Burn.

Miss Julia A. Bartley, of Toledo, Ohio, claims the championship among woman amateurs, so far as century riding is concerned. She wears a belt made up of sixty century bars, each representing a 100-mile spin on her wheel, and a watch fob which contains nine more ornaments of the same kind. Miss Bartley commenced to ride a wheel in 1892, but her ambition as a long distance rider did not show itself until October, 1896, when she rode her first century. Once started, she covered ground rapidly. In August, 1897, she rode 19 centuries, and the next month she reeled off 22, one for every day of the month on which it did not rain. Included in her trophies is a quadruple century bar, representing a run of 404 miles, made Sept. 4 and 5, 1898. Miss Bartley's belt and watch guard are to be exhibited at the Paris exposition.

The Book Tea.

The latest craze is the book tea. A number of guests—the sexes equally represented—are asked to afternoon tea, and each is to wear a badge denoting a book. The book is not necessarily a novel, though the run is on novels, nor is it necessarily a modern book, though these are more generally selected. The badge, which is a little toy, must express the title of the book. The guests arrive decorated, supplying and wearing their own decorations, and each has to guess the titles of all the others. Some people are very stupid at it, and some very quick. And there is skill, too, not only in guessing the titles, but in making the orders. There are two prizes—one for the guest who guesses most and one for the guest whose badge has been most difficult to interpret. Much tea and some time are consumed, and men and women show themselves to be children of a large growth.

Alas for the Pretty Girl.

"This is the era of the plain girl in business," said a leading milliner, "and the girl whose beauty is so insistent that none may deny it has to stand aside for her plainer sisters. You will find this is the case in nearly every business establishment in the big towns. Not that there is any aversion to moderate beauty in the employes—that is often to be desired; but pronounced loveliness is entirely too attractive, both to the possessor and contemplator, to facilitate the interests of employers.

"Go into any large milliner's and you will see scores of girls behind the counter who are quite plain, though not positively ugly. You will seldom find one whose charm of face or grace of form is so near to perfection as to hold you spellbound."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Thread-Biting Habit.

It is true that women who do much sewing frequently suffer a great deal from soreness of the mouth, and are at a loss to ascertain the cause of the trouble. That half of the time it is simply the result of biting off the thread instead of using a pair of scissors for cutting it, says an exchange. That in the case of silk thread the danger is quite marked, because it is usual to put the thread in acetate of lead, partly to harden it and also perhaps to increase its weight somewhat. That if thread-biting is followed regularly, and very much silk thread is used, the results may be quite serious and lead to blood poisoning.

Her Remarkable Gift.

Miss Mada Paddock Sprague, of Boston, the widow of the late Col. Sprague, of Detroit, now comes forward with a the claim to a remarkable gift which amounts almost to prophecy. Mrs. Sprague's fascinating philosophy is character reading by means of color vibrations, and it is claimed that she gives practical demonstrations of her power by reading even the names of unknown guests, impromptu. Mrs. Sprague says she can not remember when she could not see names and combinations of numbers in colors, and supposed for many years that it was something common to every one. Mrs. Sprague is a granddaughter of the Methodist preacher known as "Father Bowen," and is said to be a very charming and cultured woman.

To Prevent Worrying.

If a woman is to protect herself from the ravages of worry and to retain her youth for a longer period, says a writer in the Buffalo Times, she must come into more frequent contact with other people—as her husband does—and read good books. She must relieve the monotony of her duties and the limiting influence of confinement within four walls by taking outdoor exercise—a walk every day or a spin upon a bicycle. In short, she must exercise the body and mind in a healthful manner, and she will find the bloom of health and youth remain with her for years after it has faded in other women of the same age. "The ordinary woman," says a celebrated physician, "leads such a monotonous existence that her mind has no occupation but worry. She is almost made up of worry upon worry. What she more needs is to come out of herself much more than she does. She must have intercourse with more people and take more exercise. This can be done without neglecting home, and every right-minded man will do his best to secure for his mother or his sister or his wife these aids to the retention of youthfulness of body and mind."

Missouri Girl Postmistress.

Miss May Caldwell, is postmistress at Carlton, Mo. She lives with her mother, and is her mainstay, the other members of the family having died when she was quite young. Miss Caldwell's life has been uneventful, but she is very popular among her large circle of acquaintances. After quite an exciting contest she was appointed postmistress in February, 1898, and seems to be filling the office with credit to herself and to the satisfaction of the community.

MISS CALDWELL.

The Libelous "They Say."

The one term, "they say," is responsible for nine-tenths of the lies which repetition and familiarity finally convert into seemingly bona-fide evidence. One usually hears an exciting bit of gossip launched forth with these words, while at the same time the speaker adroitly shields herself by declaring that, personally, she does not know it to be true. The man or woman who thus screens himself or herself is nothing short of a coward.—Woman's Home Companion.

Chemisettes are made of all sorts of material, but those made of fine lawn with tiny tucks and insertion are most popular.

Linen cuffs and collars are worn with nice waist but those of sheer lawn and lace are much more dainty, becoming and comfortable.

Sleeves are made close fitting the entire length, though shoulder caps may be used to make the shoulders broader, if they are deficient.

Featherbone is the only thing suitable to use in the waists of wash dresses. Whalebone loses its set and shape in the washtub and steil rusts until it naps.

Silk crushed belts are great favorites. They fit to the figure more gracefully if cut on the bias, requiring about one quarter of a yard in width made a trifle shorter on the top edge.

If you petticoat (I do not refer to white ones) blows in between the ankles when walking and hangs too straight, you can make it fare by sewing a feather bone tape all around the bottom.

Blousy effects are not so much worn as a full effect from side to side in waists. Keep the front quite narrow at the waistline and run wider toward the bust, and it will give you a more tapering figure.

FOR YOUNG MEN.

Cultivate a pleasing address. It is a great essential to success and one thing necessary to it is the ability to express your idea in good, plain, smooth English. When you speak let your language be the exact expression of your meaning. Don't muddle up what you have to say, nor abbreviate nor tell the same thing over twice. Formulate your idea. That is, get a clear conception of your meaning yourself. Then say what you think in the plainest way you can. Avoid the use of large words the meaning of which some of your hearers may not understand. Speak so concisely and clearly that if what you say were written it would express your ideas exactly. Then besides clearness there is in conversation an elegance that marks the good conversationalist. To acquire this you should make a careful study of the dialogue in good books. Listen to good speakers and try to catch their style. Get into a way of putting what you have to say in a smooth, pleasing way. This requires study and careful observation of others and constant vigilance to avoid awkward phrases and sentences, but you can improve yourself in this way if you are willing to undertake it.

Wheeling Up Hill.

Physicians say that a large percentage of bicycle riders have weakened hearts as a result of over exertion made in wheeling up hills. There is an easy way of climbing a hill, which good riders know and practice, but many do not know, and as a result they spend much energy needlessly. When approaching a hill do not try to rush it, especially if it is a long, heavy one. Go easy at the bottom; save your energy for the point where it is needed most. It is important that you know how to keep the power behind your wheels steadily. Do this by following the downward stroke of your right pedal well around with power before you bring much pressure on your left, and vice versa. Keep power in the machine all the time. Fierce downward thigh thrusts, with no rotary motion backed up by power only tire the rider and do not send him up the grade. If you get into the habit of keeping up the pressure evenly riding up hill will become easy—but never so easy but that it will pay you to walk up the medium-sized hills.

ALL FOR HIS HEALTH.

Here's a Man Who Has Worn Woman's Clothes for Twelve Years.

Henry Snell, of 501 North Twenty-eighth street, Omaha, has worn a woman's dress for the last twelve years. He is a large man, with whiskers, and he did not put on skirts because he objected to trousers. It was necessity which compelled him to adopt them. Five times since he was a boy he has been overcome by heat and he also suffers from chronic rheumatism. He has found by painful experience that a loose and flowing garment is necessary for him comfort, and consequently he has adopted a modified form of the Mother Hubbard. He lives in a pretty little cottage, surrounded by big cotton wood trees, and, because of his peculiar appearance, rarely goes outside the door.

DRIER FOR MY LADY'S HAIR.

Evaporates All Moisture from Freshly Shampooed Tresses.

The discomfort of carrying a wad of wet hair on her head and the time consumed in drying it frequently deters a woman from enjoying the delights of a shampoo. After the hair has been washed, it is a matter of several hours to dry it, and unless great care is exercised the risk of catching severe cold during this drying operation is very great. A very simple arrangement to dry the hair quickly has been patented by John W. Hillerman and Nicholas Rossi, of Lyons, Kan. It comprises a metal chamber on a stand, which permits of its adjustment at the head of the subject. The top is sloping to receive the hair, and is covered with asbestos to prevent any damage by heat being done to the tresses. Inside this chamber is a lamp and around the top are apertures to permit the heat to pass through the hair. By this means an operation heretofore requiring several hours may be performed in fifteen to twenty minutes.

MEN AS CUSTOMERS.

Clerks Find Them Much Easier to Wait Upon than Women.

A saleswoman sees phases of human nature that are seldom revealed under other conditions, and there is enough of truth in this sketch—from the Philadelphia Times—to make it interesting to both sexes.

The saleswoman whose duty it is to wait upon men was not thus engaged. She had gone to serve a woman, who proved to be an extremely hard customer to suit, calling for one style after another. The clerk was becoming discouraged, and beginning to feel as if she didn't care whether a sale was made.

At this point another saleswoman said to her, "Maud, there's a man," and came to relieve her of the uncomfortable customer.

"Thank goodness!" exclaimed Maud, as she started toward the counter where men's gloves were sold.

"What would you like to see, sir?" she asked of the man who was waiting.

"I want a medium shade of brown, with wide stitch on the back, and fastened with a button instead of a clasp."

The saleswoman placed a varied assortment before him. Quickly selecting a pair, he exclaimed, "Just what I want!" and had one glove fitted. It suited him exactly, and having paid for his purchase, he left the store.

Now what sort of gloves does the reader think this man purchased? They were a dark shade of brown, not medium; they had a narrow stitch on the back, not wide; they were fastened with a clasp, not with buttons.

Perhaps some man can answer this question: Why do women like to wait on men better than on their own sex—because men are so easily pleased, or because they do not really know what they want?

Against Licking Postage Stamps.

In connection with the practice of stamp licking, a medical contemporary says: What layman would suspect that the unassuming postage stamp could become an active vehicle for the spread of deadly ailments? Yet so it is, and the name of "stamp licker's tongue" has recently been brought to our notice by two distinguished medical men. It is known to few that the common postage stamp owes its adhesiveness to the serum of the horse. It follows that the film drawn from such a source may, or even must, at times be charged with microbes of a more or less hurtful nature. If a man licked a large number of stamps daily over a sufficiently long period of time, the chances are he would set up cancer of that much abused member. The danger has long been recognized by the postal authorities of this country, who have placed dampers on the counters of the postoffice.

She Knew His Footsteps.

His enemies may have originated, but his friends do not hesitate to repeat, a story about a rising young politician, who, says the New York Tribune, has large feet, as well as a capacious head.

The politician's mother, a lovable old woman, is unfortunately very deaf. She lives in a flat in the neighborhood of Grant's tomb, and is always delighted by a visit from her son.

When the United States cruiser Brooklyn, which was anchored in the Hudson, off the tomb, on Memorial day, fired a salute of twenty-one guns, the old lady was observed to start, fix her cap, and smooth down her apron.

Then she said, with a sweet smile, "George is coming. I hear his footsteps on the stairs."

And He Did.

Angler—Hush! Keep back! Keep back! I had a beautiful rise just then, I shall get another directly.—Punch.

Art is long; that is why women linger in front of mirrors.

A Trip to Philadelphia.

After a very hurried purchase of a Philadelphia ticket and a run for the Lake Shore morning accommodation, I found myself resting leisurely as the train sped for the city on the Maumee. My ticket read, "good for continuous passage only," but as a lapse of only five minutes separated my train from the next one I accidentally missed it and enjoyed a six-hours rest in Toledo and a little of their modern midway, and saw about two hours march of their labor day parade. Some features of it were unique; donkeys, camels and elephants were harnessed into it, and made a part of it. It seemed to disintegrate soon after the leading part got near the disbanding station, so that hundreds who had secured good viewing stations saw but little of it. Three p. m. and No. 6 is bearing us eastward rapidly, but losing time, owing mainly to the weight of the train. Northern Ohio seems to have suffered severely from the drouth, and brown pastures and short and rapidly drying up cornfields were visible on every hand. Night overtook us at Cleveland an hour later. After a delay of a few minutes, we were again in motion for Buffalo, which we reached about 11:30, nearly two hours late, with the comforting advice from the conductor that we could not get a train over the Lehigh until 8:30 the next day. After waiting a long time, our transfers were honored by a slow passage on a bus to the Lehigh depot. I immediately asked the depot master when we could get a train; the answer came, "now; it is moving; run!" We did run. A lady preceded me whom the guards boosted on the rear steps of the rear sleeper. With their help I also succeeded in catching on; the closest shave I ever had in mounting a train. (It seemed that the train also was late.) After groping my way through five or six dimly lighted sleepers, passing and jostling against the disrobing passengers. I found my way to a partially filled day coach and secured a double seat. I tried to while the tedious night away in sleep, but it was not the Lake Shore. The motion of the cars around curves would wake me up every minute or two. After many vain attempts, I gave it up. The first streaks of dawn found us at Sayre, on the line between New York and Pennsylvania. A dense, cold fog hid everything for awhile; when it lifted, the whole scene was changed. Instead of level fields and farms, giant hills and deep valleys are all around us. The two monster engines drawing our train ground and fretted under the load. Sharp curves succeeded each other so rapidly that both ends of the train were often visible. After some hours of toilsome climbing, we approached the summit. The railroad seemed to keep on the backbone of the mountain. Looking down into the valleys which spread out before us like an immense panoroma, I counted at one time no less than eight towns and villages with here and there a white speck that indicated a dwelling. The road bed is double tracked and very crooked, but the trains make very good time. We reached the old Quaker city at about 1 p. m. and witnessed most of the parade, which was very impressive and required more than six hours to pass a given point. The boys were hilarious in their enthusiasm. The city was most beautifully deccorated and at night magnificently illuminated. Wednesday I visited Cramp's ship yards in company with an old sailor, an employe of the insurance company of North America whom they detailed to show me about. Thursday I took the Pennsylvania express and in less than two hours, had compassed the ninety eight intervening miles and was treading the historic mazes of Broadway, Wall street and the Battery, and looking down upon old Trinity's Spire two hundred and seven feet from the ground, from one of New York's modern sky-scrapers. I crossed the great bridge in trolley cars and visited that midway of all midways, Coney Island with its miles of inviting beach and amusement halls of every name and nature. The surf was dotted with bathers, men women and children, though in September.

Returning I had an excellent view of Greenwood, that most famous of all American cities of the dead, famous for its rare beauty of flowers and contour. I again crossed the bridge on foot and was amazed at its immensity and strength, four railroad tracks, two wagon tracks and a footpath as wide as a Philadelphia street. I re-crossed the ferry and in two hours was again in Philadelphia and in two more was on board the Lehigh-Buffalo Express, which dropped me off at 9 a. m. in Buffalo. A trolley car soon bore me to the attraction of all attractions, Niagara Falls. I spent five or six hours in walking from one point of view to another, and in a trip down the seven miles of gorge now traversed in forty minutes by a trolley. All its superb scenery is displayed in this trip. We approached within a few feet of its mad, seething effort to reach a level.

I also crossed to the Canada side and thus obtained an excellent view of the Horseshoe Falls. I returned to Buffalo and waited weary hours for a belated Lake Shore train, which finally showed up and bore me home Saturday afternoon, September 9. J. A. C.

RESOLUTIONS

HEAD QUARTERS, DELONG POST, G. A. R. SEPTEMBER, 1899.

As God Almighty in His infinite Wisdom has seen fit to call away the only son on whom he was dependent in his old age of our dear Comrade John Hamilton. we DeLong Post would tender to the old Comrade our heartfelt sympathy in his bereavement May he in his sorrow not look downward into the grave just closed as such who have no God, but upward to the mount from whence cometh all help; may he resign his all to the will of the Almighty and may God strenghten him and draw him closer to His bosom, and may the Comrade eventually rejoice and proclaim: "Thy Will of God be done." By the Post.

HIS WIFE COULDN'T COOK.

So he decided to apply for a divorce, for he considered he had good grounds therefor. But the judge, after hearing his complaint, scratched the bald place on the top of his head, looked over his specs at the poor fellow, shifted the quid of tobacco to the other side of his mouth, and said: "You don't need no divorce. You go home and ask your wife to forgive you. On the way home stop at Davenport's Drug store and buy a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin; take it according to directions, and if you can't eat anything in less than a week from biled cabbage up, come up o me, and I will give you a divorce and alimony both."

When the British warships at Gibraltar were firing a salute to welcome Dewey, a gunner had his arm shattered by a premature explosion, so it was amputated. On leaving that port, Dewey and his officers made up a purse of £30, about $150, for the unfortunate seaman.

About midnight Saturday, train robbers held up a Southern Pacific train at Cachise, a lonely desert station in Arizona. As the train stopped, an armed man boarded the engine, two guarded the door to the express car and one cared for the passengers, keeping them indoors. No one was robbed but the express car was hauled out a mile or so and the safe blown open. It is supposed about $40,000 was taken. Then they went to the spot where they had left their horses, and went out of sight in a hurry. In the hour the train was delayed, the station agent had wired to Tucson, and Tucson had wired to Wilcox for help. The latter sent a force of men on a special, but the robbers had been gone about fifteen minutes. The trail was followed a short distance and then lost.

The Tumble Weed.

But a few years ago the papers all over the country were copying an article describing a queer plant with queer habits called the "Tumble Weed." It was abundant on new prairies from the Gulf of Manitoba. Now it is found in nearly every corn field about Auburn. It is a sort of pig weed, but it spreads out from its one root and forms a whole bush. As it matures, the root becomes brittle and the wind easily breaks it off at the ground, leaving the wide, dry, fluffy thing to blow away and scatter its abundant seed We have seen this weeed on new prairies in South Dakota, come flying over a range of hills, going high into the air and when striking the ground go jumping off across the country in great bounds, and finally piling up in winrows at some obstruction like a fence or a railway. Farmers in this section are already finding it a nuisance.

EVOLUTION OF EXPOSITIONS.

How the Great World's Fairs of To-day Have Grown from a Little Display of China in Paris a Century Ago.

As early as 1797 the Marquis d'Aveze, having received the appointment as commisioner of the Royal Manufacturies of the Gobelins, of Sevres, and of the Savonnerie, found that the turbulent times of the revolution had so discouraged the industrial arts that the skilled workmen of these places were reduced to starvation, while the store rooms were filled with the choicest productions of their art. This condition gave him the idea of holding an exhibition where tapestries, china and carpets could be gathered together and a great sale held.

The then unused chateau of St. Cloud was taken for this purpose, but on the day of the opening a decree of the directory banishing the nobility was issued, and he was compelled to quit France, and return the following year, and, on the failure of his first attempt, originate another exhibition, which proved very successful. This was held at the Chateau de Orsay, where the house and grounds were filled with beautiful and useful stuffs and wares of all varieties.

The success of this undertaking caused the government to take up the idea, and the first official exposition was held on the Champ de Mars, where a "Temple of Industry" had been erected for the purpose. At this exposition was inaugurated the jury system of awards. So successful did it prove that the government resolved to hold annual exhibitions of like character, but the disturbed condition of the country prevented a repetition until the year 1801. The third exposition, held in 1802, saw the origination of the Societe d'Encouragement, which has been a powerful aid to French manufacture. On this occasion there were 600 prize competitors. It was at this exposition that cotton lace and silk thread were first shown and a prize was awarded for the manufactures of iron by means of coke.

No further efforts were successful until in 1819, when another exposition was held, after which those of 1823 and 1827 occurred with varying success. In 1844 the tenth and last exposition during the reign of Louis Philippe saw 3,960 exhibitors participating. Another exposition on a grand scale was that of 1849. Nearly 5,000 exhibitors were represented and 3,738 prizes were awarded. The exhibition continued for sixty days, and its results were so beneficial that other nations began to realize its importance to trade.

Three other countries had previously given expositions of a more or less local nature. Such were those that had been held in Russia, Denmark, and Austria, and many of great importance had been held in Belgium.

In the British dominions expositions had been held both in Manchester and Leeds, and one in Dublin as early as 1827. It remained for England to promote the first actual international industrial exposition—that of 1851. At the first meeting of the commissioners it was decided to rely wholly upon voluntary contributions, and when an appeal was made a fund of $1,500,000 was soon raised. One single contributor headed the list with the large amount of $250,000. Designs for the building were submitted by architects of all nations. A plan suggested by Sir Joseph Paxton was the one chosen, but to Mr. Fox, of the firm of Fox & Henderson, is due the credit of having originated that new style of architecture which was afterward dubbed the "Ferro Vitreous" style, he having worked out and made possible Sir Joseph's suggestion. Thus originated the first "Crystal Palace." The total cost of the building was $850,000. This show proved a success. Before the opening $200,000 had already been received for season tickets, and during the six months it remained open the average number of daily visitors was 43,536. At its close there remained a balance of $750,000 above all expenses.

The year 1853 saw two Crystal Palace shows in operation. That of New York was organized by a few influential citizens of wealth as a stock company, with the end in view of bringing the manufactured goods of the Old World here to be placed in comparison with those of the New. The other show of the year was that held in Dublin. This, too, while very successful as an exhibition, did not attract the international interest it merited, nor did it in a financial way prove a success.

The next great exposition was that of Paris, held in 1855. Preparations for this exposition were begun as early as 1853, but up to February, 1854, little progress had been made. So slow did the work progress that the exposition, which was to have opened on the 1st of May, was delayed until the 15th of that month. The main building, the the Palais de l'Industrie, was not built as a temporary structure, as such buildings had previously been, but was intended to remain as a permanent building for exposition purposes. In all, the floor space of this great exposition reached the total of twenty-nine acres. The exhibitors numbered some 21,000, of which number France contributed one-half. This exposition, which differed from all previous ones in the great variety of its objects and extent of productions, was closed in ceremony. The American exhibit was by far the finest we had ever made abroad, the war of the rebellion having interfered with any pretentious display being made in London in 1862. It is estimated that the total number of visitors to this great show exceeded 4,000,000. The total cost of the buildings was $2,356,605, or $143 per square foot covered. It closed with a net profit of $562,654, dividends being declared of $553,200. The remaining amount was devoted to public works.

Expositions were held in Moscow and Copennagen in 1872, but were more national in character, confined as they were to the products of the country in which they were held.

A decree issued by the Austrian Emperor, May 24, 1870, announced that "under the august patronage of his imperial and royal majesty, the Emperor, an international exhibition would be held in Vienna in 1873." To this end an appropriation by the government of $3,000,000 was made, and later, as the work progressed, an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 more was found necessary. Universal interest was shown in this great undertaking, the foreign governments selecting from among their most eminent men their representative commissioners. An idea of the magnitude of this great show may be gleaned from the fact that there were in all 2,602 awards made, the total number of exhibitors being about 7,000. The total cost of buildings and accessories was $7,850,000. Receipts from visitors, $1,283,648.78. This with the additions to revenue from concessions and sale of buildings, was far from enough to cover the great expense incurred, the deficit being met by the government.

The Centennial International Exposition of Philadelphia, in 1876, which gave such an impetus to art in America, as well as all succeeding expositions at home and abroad, is remembered too well by all to come within the scope of this article.

Protected Spiders.

At the Royal Observatory at Greenwich the visitor may peer into a tube of a veteran telescope twenty-five feet long, much in use some 175 years ago, but now inhabited by several colonies of spiders. These creatures find such irresistible attraction in its roominess, coolness and darkness that, when some years since an assistant endeavored to bring about their removal by the customary methods, they sturdily refused to move. Eviction failing, the astronomers made the spiders pay for their lodgings in the form of goods supplied. For years an extremely fine fabric had been wanted to stretch across the eye pieces of telescopes devoted to transit reading. One day a scientific eye lighted on the spiders. The day following they were raided, and now they live and weave under official protection.

A Nice Distinction.

The other patrons of a fashionable restaurant felt sure the two at the corner table were father and son and were from the rural districts. Their table manners were such that any polite jury would have brought in a verdict of justifiable homicide had the head waiter fallen upon the two as they sat side by side at the little table, whose snowy cloth they were sadly disfiguring. Vigorously they wielded knife and fork—very little fork, but much knife. At last the way in which the son spread his elbows interfered with the free play of the father and brought about a loud rebuke from the old man.

"Look a-here, Jefferson," said the father, sternly, "draw in them elbows and eat in a narrer circle. Ain't your mar ever told you it warn't polite to shove others with your elbows when you dine out. It's powerful bad manners to make your old father cut his mouth at the table."

Victorian Autographs.

The Duchess of St. Aibans owns what is probably the most interesting collection of Victorian autographs in the world. Besides the royal family and the nobility represented, there are words especially contributed by Tennyson, Browning, Gladstone, John Bright, and Chamberlain, and verses written exclusively for the duchess by the best known verse makers of the day.

South African Gold Exports.

Consul Macrum (Pretoria, Transvaal republic), writes that the average export of gold from the ports of South Africa amount now to about $2,092,595 each week.

WARFARE NOVELTY.

SEA FIGHTING MAY NOW BE REVOLUTIONIZED.

New Battleship Which Is So Constructed as to Be Practically Shot-Proof—Submerged Earthworks to Render Harbors Impregnable.

Whether or not the art of battle-ship construction is destined to be revolutioned by the newly patented invention of William Weegar, of New York City, remains to be found out, but his idea is unquestionably striking. He proposes to uplift from the hull of his vessel, by means of towers, a huge armored chamber running from bow to stern and holding a battery of rapid-fire guns arranged in broadside. Two of the towers, one at each end, will be conning towers, but the other two, of large size, will be surmounted by turrets containing pairs of 12-inch breech-loading rifles. There will also be four 8-inch rifles, forward and aft, so that, with forty quick-fires in all, the armament will be most formidable.

Perhaps the most notable point about this novel fighting craft is its invulnerability. It is practically shot-proof, its construction being such that a shell striking any part of it must meet a slant and so glance off. In order to accomplish this end, the armored chamber is made polygonal in section, while the towers are cylindrical. The deck is a whaleback, its upper part barely rising above the sea, and all the machinery and ammunition are below water level, so as to be safe from injury. Staircases and ammunition-hoists run up inside of the towers, and the waves may wash freely across the body of the ship without entering the gun ports or interfering with the operation of the fighting apparatus above.

IS THIS THE COMING TYPE OF BATTLESHIP?

Not less notable than the foregoing is a method newly invented by a Cincinnati man, Andrew Van Bibber, for rendering harbors impregnable against attack by sea. It is guaranteed to accomplish the purpose with the use of a comparatively small force of men and without the aid of war-ships, thus being equivalent to an increase of the navy, inasmuch as it relieves fleets to a great extent from the duty of defending the coast. Of this latter point the importance was illustrated in the recent war with Spain, during which the operations of our maritime forces were seriously hampered by the ever-present necessity of looking out for the protection of the cities along the Atlantic seaboard.

As the inventor says: "The greatly-increased range of naval guns demands that defensive works be more remote from the place defended than formerly—else the defended city may be ruined while the attack is being repulsed. A city, of course, affords a very large target, and its protection is proportionately difficult, especially in these days of high-power cannon. Besides, the fleet urgently needed for its defense may not arrive in time."

The Van Bibber system consists in extending from the harbor mouth seaward two lines of embankments built of concrete and so arranged as to form an artificial entrance to the port. On these embankments are placed bomb-proof forts, consisting substantially of revolving turrets containing high-power guns. The tops of the embankments are slightly below low-water mark, but submarine chambers are provided for magazines and other uses. The forts themselves, as a matter of course, ought to be protected by armor thick enough to be practically impenetrable by shell.

From this brief description it will be understood that a hostile war-ship approaching a city thus defended, could get into the harbor only by passing through the artificial channel referred to, and in doing so it would be exposed to murderous attack at short range by the forts on the flanking embankments. Meanwhile, another fort, situated at the landward end of the entrance, would rake the latter from end to end with a storm of projectiles. Under such circumstances it would be impossible for the enemy's vessels to maneuver freely, and being confined in a narrow gut, they would face almost certain destruction by mines, while held at a distance from the city by guns much heavier than their own and capable of smashing to pieces their armor plates. The channel may be 200 yards or half a mile in width, but the longer it is the more efficient it will be for defensive purposes.

JACKKNIFE SAVED HIS LIFE.

Narrow Escape of a Railroad Man from Death.

The bald-headed railroad man who frequents the rotunda of the Great Northern Hotel these evenings is usually the center of quite a group of loungers, for he has many interesting incidents of adventure to relate.

"When I was a section boss down in Texas," he said the other evening, "I had the crookedest piece of track in the State—couldn't see two telegraph poles at one time at any point on my section. Right where the tool house was there was a curve and at one end of the curve there was a switch for a passing track. I had my men working one day around the curve, near the tool house, and while they were filling in a piece of track I moseyed down to take a look at the switch at the other end of the curve. The men were about a quarter of a mile from the switch, but out of view around the curve. In those days we didn't take the precaution to put blocks of wood in the chinks of the frogs and at the end of the guard rails as they do now to keep brakemen from getting their feet fast. If we had I would not have been telling this story, because it wouldn't have happened.

"As I was poking around the frog I got one of my heels wedged in one of the numerous openings and could not get myself away. I tugged away and swore a little under my breath, but a machinists' vise could not have held that heel tighter than the frog did. You can easily judge the extent of my alarm when I heard a train whistle for a crossing which I knew to be a mile and a half from the point where I was fastened; I looked at my watch; it was the 4 o'clock 'cannon ball' from the west and I knew that it would bear down upon me in three minutes unless I succeeded in wrenching the heel off my shoe, which appeared a hopeless task. The train would shoot around the curve, the engineer would not have time even to slow down in response to my signal, and I would be ground beneath the wheels. The train was approaching from the direction of my men and I shouted, hoping they might hear me and flag it, but it was a vain hope, and I heard the train roar across a bridge less than a mile away. I was beginning to despair, but cast a glance around to see if help was coming from any other quarter, when I saw a small, tow-headed boy standing in the middle of the track behind me.

"'Run up there,' I yelled, pointing toward the tool house, 'and flag the cannon ball.'

"The boy looked at me, but did not budge.

"'Run, run,' I whooped again, 'or I'll be killed! Don't you see my foot's fast and I can't get off the track?'

"The boy said nothing, but put his hand in his pocket and pulled out his jackknife. I thought he would look for a stick next, so he could whittle while he discussed my proposition, as they do down in Texas. I could hear the engine bell ringing to warn my men to clear the track, and I knew that there remained but a few seconds between myself and death, as the boy had stood inactive too long to get any distance away and signal the engineer.

"But the boy was not as stupid as I had thought him to be; indeed, he was not half as stupid as myself. He didn't look for a stick, but he stepped up beside me, stooped down, ran the keen blade of the knife over my shoestring, straightened up, grinned and said:

"'Yank yer foot out, mister; here she comes.'

"I roll off the track and the train swept past, and the boy sauntered away down the track just as if nothing at all had happened."—Chicago Chronicle.

A Sagacious Pig.

Pigs that have amazed vast crowds at the circus by their performances are not to be mentioned in the same breath with the young porker, the following account of which has been sent to the Record by a person who has heretofore been considered thoroughly reliable and truthful:

"One of the big drays going down Tenth street on Thursday, having to stop at the corner of Carpenter street, the boys who were utilizing the rear end for rides were surprised and delighted to see a pig try to scramble up beside them. Kindly hands helped him and he sat content among the free riders until a small street below Morris was reached, when he intimated by grunts and scrambling that he wanted to get off the dray. He was assisted to the street and immediately made his way to a doorstep, where he was at home, as he was soon admitted to the house.

"He is a pet pig owned by a dermatologist, who is making experiments upon him with newly invented hair tonics. Every few days piggy appears on the doorstep with bristles of a different color, and it is said his hairs really begin to curl, owing to the application of castor oil and quinine. Recently, having been treated with peroxide of hydrogen, he has been of a most beautiful gold color. Piggy is bathed every day, has his teeth brushed with listerine, and sits on the front steps with the children, ocasionally strolling a square or two with them. The fact that he knew his way home and preferred to ride there has made him quite a hero in the neighborhood."—Philadelphia Record.

Two Happy Thoughts.

From far-away Ceylon comes a funny little story. A tea planter who had a glass eye was desirous of going away for a day's shooting with a friend, but he knew that as soon as the natives who were at work on the plantation heard that he was gone they would not do a stroke of work. How was he to get off? That was the question. After much thought an idea struck him. Going up to the men he addressed them thus:

"Although I myself will be absent, yet I shall leave one of my eyes to see that you do your work." And much to the surprise and bewilderment of the natives, he took out the glass eye and placed it on the stump of a tree and left. For some time the men worked industriously; but at last one of them, seizing his tin, in which he carried his food, approached the tree, and gently placed it over the eye. This done, they all lay down and slept sweetly until sunset.

"Madam," said the soldier of misfortune, who was touring the country disguised as a tramp, "I do not want anything in the way of home-made delicacies for the interior department, but if it isn't asking too much I would be glad to have you do a little sewing for me."

"Very well," replied the kind-hearted lady, "what can I do for you?"

"'Tis but a trifle," said the unrecorded globe trotter. "I have a button here that I will thank you to sew a shirt on."

"No," said the conscientious candidate, "I'd like very much to secure the nomination, but I cannot tell a lie."

"Oh, that's all right," answered the old politician, "here is pen, ink and paper—you can write it."

"Why did you place such a tough fowl before me?" asked the indignant lady patron of the waiter in a downtown restaurant.

"Age before beauty, always, you know, madam," was the gallant reply.

And then, woman-like, she smiled and paid her bill without a murmur.

A Royal Visit.

A former servant of the Queen on her Osborne estates gives this account of a visit paid by her majesty to his humble home, which, it may be added, was the first cottage built after the Queen's arrival at Osborne: "Yes, the Queen and two of the Princesses—Princess Royal and Princess Alice, if I minds right—have eaten at my table. They have. It was this way: My son used to have his dinner set for him alone, 'cause he worked later than me, an' one day the Queen and the Princesses come into my cottage just as he was a-set down, an' he run away a bit frightened, you know, an' the Queen set down an' tasted the dinner, an' give the Princesses some of the 'tolties, an' they says to my missus, 'They's better than what we gets up at Osborne.'"

THE CHALICE OF TEARS.

His small hands bore a heavy cup
  Along the garden way;
It was so brimmed with tears, he could
  Not set it down and play.

"Oh, come with us!" his comrades cried;
  "Oh, come! The flowers are sweet,
And other little angels wait
  The coming of our feet."

He slowly shook his drooping head,
  And said in piteous tone,
"I cannot play; my mother weeps
  Because she is alone."

Their gentle, loving eyes grew dim;
  They passed along the word
From one to one, until at last
  A great white angel heard.

And, soon commissioned, he took flight,
  Past cloud and moon and star;
Swiftly he winged his way to earth,
  Where grievous troubles are.

And in the midnight hour to one
  Whose cheek still bore a tear,
While breath came sobbingly, he caused
  A vision to appear.

She saw her baby, tired and sad,
  His fingers clasping tight
Her cup of tears, which he had borne
  For many a day and night.

"He cannot rest," the angel said,
  "Nor run along the way.
He cannot smile till you have smiled,
  And bade him sing and play.

"Oh, haste!" she cried. "Oh, haste, and take
  From him that cup of tears,
Let him be happy, and I'll bear
  Unwept my lonely years."

SAVED BY HIS WIFE.

DOWN in Alabama they tell a strange story about a man who succeeded in cheating the gallows by a clever ruse. As he lived a respectable life afterward, and some of his children are still living, his real name is not given. We will call him Devereux.

William Devereux was a rising young lawyer of good family, married to an accomplished wife, and possessed a large number of admiring and devoted friends. Indeed, he was one of those magnetic persons having the fortunate faculty of making strong and loyal friends of nearly all who came in contact with him.

But in the town where he lived there was considerable dissipation of a certain kind. Devereux became a member of a choice circle of card players. He lost money of others with which he had been intrusted. For a long time he managed to keep his state of affairs concealed by a sort of system of robbing Peter to pay Paul, and to meet his obligations as they matured. But a period came when William Devereux realized that these things could be concealed no longer, and the day of exposure and disgrace came ever nearer.

It was in the old-fashioned times when there were no railroads, no telegraph, no means of travel, save over ill-kept roads, generally on horseback. It was before the day when drafts, bills of exchange and similar banking conveniences for facilitating money transfers had reached anything like modern perfection, and payments were made at a distance by sending the money itself.

It was also the custom of the various county collectors and treasurers to make yearly trips to the State capital, carrying such money as had been collected in their districts on behalf of the State and the necessary papers and vouchers, and have an annual settlement for the year's receipts and disbursements.

Now, at the time when Devereux's affairs were most desperate, his own county treasurer started out on horseback with the State money, a large sum, in a pair of saddlebags, to effect his annual accounting.

On the road he was joined by a fellow traveler, who afterward was proved to be Devereux. They put up one night at a roadside tavern, occupying the same room. Next morning the treasurer was found dead in bed, his throat cut from ear to ear. His companion had disappeared, and the saddlebags, with their contents, were also missing. The country side was aroused, bloodhounds were brought out, and a fierce chase of some hours resulted in Devereux being run down and captured. There was no question but that he had been the murdered man's companion the night before, but none of the missing money or papers were found upon him.

These were the facts in the case. When the news passed from traveler to traveler along the country roads, and finally reached Devereux's home town, there was a tremendous sensation, further heightened when the damning circumstances of his business affairs came to light and made clear the motive of the crime.

Nevertheless, many of his friends were still loyal, strong family influence was exerted in his behalf, the best lawyers were employed, and every effort was made to free him from the consequences of his awful crime. All without avail. He was tried, found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. The higher courts decided against him on appeal. The Governor refused to interfere, and Devereux occupied a cell in the jail at the little town of St. Stephens, closely guarded, within a few days of the date appointed for his execution, with all prospects of escape seemingly cut off.

In spite of the enormity of his crime, there began to be a great deal of sympathy for the man who lay in jail awaiting death. His youth, his handsome face, his graceful, dignified bearing, his calm courage, his perfect manner and his unfailing persistence in the declaration of his innocence all combined to produce this effect. He expressed no animosity toward witnesses, judge, jury or prosecutor, simply stating that he was an unfortunate victim of remarkable circumstances, from which he could blame no one for drawing the mistaken inference of his guilt.

The sheriff who guarded him was of the number of those thus impressed, and in his secret heart deeply sorrowed at the prospect of his sad duty, although he relaxed not at all his vigilance, and the adoption of every precaution to prevent escape.

To this officer the prisoner frequently expressed the firm belief that he would not be hanged. He assured him that, however, he had no idea of escape, other than by some divine intervention, which would establish his innocence and point out the guilty man.

Not many days before the one fatal day the sheriff found the prisoner visibly agitated, and in an excited state, noticeably different from his usual calmness. In answer to the officer's question as to the reason, Devereux gave the following explanation:

"I have had," he said, "a most extraordinary experience. It came to me last night in the form of a dream, so real, distinct and different from the usual hazy dimness of ordinary visions that I believe it to be the premonition of an actual event. I cannot rid myself of this impression. I expect it may seem foolish to you or the result of the broodings and half waking imaginings of a man in my condition, but nevertheless I will tell it to you.

"Last night I dreamed I was standing on the scaffold facing thousands of people. The scene was as real to me as the actuality itself. I had spoken a few words of farewell and was about to resign myself to your hands when suddenly by the exercise of some new faculty of perception I saw the real murderer standing in the crowd before me. I never saw him before, and yet I knew him to be the man in whose stead I was about to suffer death. He was slight in build, with dark hair and eyes and neatly dressed. His features are indelibly fixed in my mind. With this recognition my dream faded away. There was no further intimation as to my fate, yet I feel indeed as though God himself has spoken to me and revealed the absolute assurance of His divine protection."

The narrator's manner was so earnest and impressive that a hope sprang up responsive in the sheriff's mind that something might happen. He was mentally prepared and on the watch for the happening of the miraculous.

The day of the execution was a beautiful, clear, cool October day. Thousands of people were in attendance, and had gathered about the gallows. It was to be a public hanging, and the multitude availed itself of the privilege of seeing a human being choked to death. As has been intimated, there was much feeling and sympathy for the doomed man, much argument as to the fallibility of circumstantial evidence, and a hundred vague rumors in circulation suggesting his innocence.

At last Devereux stood upon the gallows platform and faced the people. There was no man in all that crowd apparently so cool, collected, and so much the master of himself. He stepped forward to say a few words of farewell. His voice rang out in the stillness clear, distinct and perfectly audible to all.

"Friends," he said, "this is not a fitting time to indulge in vain protestations. I can but simply reaffirm that I am not guilty, knowing well what would be the consequences of a falsehood, standing, as I am, almost in the presence of my immortal God. I desire especially to relieve any man from the possible thought that he may have misjudged or wronged me, and might have to meet my accusing words before the great tribunal hereafter. It was a human error, the result——"

At this moment the speaker stopped short and leaned heavily upon the railing. His countenance betrayed terrible excitement. His eyes seemed fixed on some one in the crowd before him whom he indicated, bound as he was, as well as he could. When he found his voice he fairly shrieked:

"There he is! The man of my dream, the murderer! Stop him! Stop him!"

He had pointed out a slightly built, almost feminine looking young man, who uttered a hasty exclamation and attempted to get away, but before he could do so he was roughly seized and held by the crowd. The sheriff, almost beside himself with excitement, rushed down from the scaffold, followed by half a dozen deputies. The young man was hurriedly searched there and then. Upon his person was found a watch, a pistol, and certain papers of value, well known to have been the property of the murdered treasurer. He seemed to give up at once, and in answer to excited questions sullenly responded:

"Well, it seems you have me. I was a fool to come here. I demand of the officers protection from this crowd."

Protection was needed. Like quicksilver, a knowledge of the matter seemed to have permeated the whole multitude. An innocent man was saved and the guilty apprehended in the nick of time. Cries of "Hang the scoundrel!" "Turn Devereux loose!" arose from all sides, while the officers struggled fiercely to withstand the surge of the angry mob. There was no knowing what might have happened had not Devereux's voice arrested the movement.

"Let the law take its course," he said. "For God's sake do not be too rash! I implore you, as one who has been so near an ignoble death by reason of this awful mistake, to let the sheriff take this man. Give him a fair trial, and may God forgive him for what he has tried to do to me."

The words of no other man could have saved the new prisoner. The crowd gave way. The hanging of Devereux was out of the question. The populace would not have permitted it, and the sheriff would any how have felt justified in suspending the execution.

The mob poured up the gallows stairs and cut the ropes that bound Devereux. The jail officials hurried the prisoner to the jail. Once there the latter made a full confession, which soon became the talk of the streets. Nothing could be done that was too good for Devereux, who at first busied himself in counseling moderation, and being satisfied of its accomplishment, simply asked for two things. He wanted to go at once, he said, and bear the glad tidings back to his wife. For this purpose he requested the loan of a good horse and some money, a request which was enthusiastically gratified. At sunset Devereux was miles away.

In the morning the new prisoner spoke to the sheriff when that officer was making the rounds of the jail.

"I think now," he said, "you had better let me go."

This display of assurance caused the sheriff to think the prisoner crazy.

"I mean what I say," he persisted; "send a woman here, your wife. I am a woman. I am William Devereux's wife. My purpose is fulfilled. I have saved his life and he is now far away. You can never catch him. He sent me word where I would find the things you found on me, and I used them to deceive you."

It was true. Devereux's prison manner, his talk, the dream, the denouement at the gallows, were all parts of a skillfully worked and successful plot. The chivalrous spirit of the time and country saved his wife from any punishment. Devereux went to California, changed his name, was joined by his faithful wife, prospered greatly, and died not many years ago, the leading citizen of a thriving city that bore his false name.—Waverley Magazine.

ONCE A SWEET SINGER.

She Now Sings the Songs of Other Days Only in Her Sleep.

From away down the coast of Maine, at North Castine, where the mysterious tide ebbs and flows so fierce, comes a story from a correspondent strange and unaccountable. He writes that Mrs. Lucretia M. Judson, the once favorite singer of Portland, has regained her sweet voice after nearly fifty years of silence. Although she hears it not herself, or knows why or when it happens, except when told by others, her voice is the same and she sings the same old songs she used to charm the listeners with fifty years ago.

In many parts of Maine Mrs. Judson was recognized in her early days as possessing a sweet soprano voice. She was the recognized leader in that section of the country. One day a few years after her marriage her voice left her and she seemed to lose all ear for music. Since that time she has never been known to sing. Many a time she has been heard to lament the los sof her voice, for she loved music so well.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Judson went to visit a Mrs. Lynch while a revival was in progress a few miles from her home. After bedtime Mrs. Lynch heard the sweetest song she had ever listened to. It was one of the old love songs of her youth. "I've wandered to-day to the mill," etc. She was charmed and surprised. The sound came from Mrs. Judson's room. Next morning she asked Mrs. Judson to sing the same song again. She was astonished to hear the woman say she could not, and had not sung for forty years or more.

"Why, I heard you singing last night," said Mrs. L.

"Oh, no, you didn't," answered Mrs. Judson. "If you did I must have been asleep, for I don't know a thing about it."

The next night she sang a verse of another of her favorite songs. She asked Mrs. Lynch to call her if such a thing occurred again, for she did not believe it could be possible. While Mrs. Judson was filling the night with song, Mrs. Lynch crept stealthily to her room. The woman was sitting up in bed, her eyes closed, and was singing as if her whole soul was in her song. Mrs. Lynch hadn't the heart to wake her up, and listened with delight until she had finished a soft and beautiful cadence.

Next morning the woman went to her home at Pierce's Pond, and her husband is delighted, for he says she sings nearly every night one of the old time melodies. When awake the woman has no ear for music any more than if she had never been a singer.

On the Mercy of the Court.

A youthful graduate of the Harvard Law School came West and opened an office in a small frontier town. His first client was a man accused of stealing a horse. The case came to trial before an old judge and a jury composed of bewhiskered ranchers, and though there was no doubt of the guilt of the defendant, he had a regiment of friends who swore he was forty miles off when the horse was stolen. This evidence the prosecution was unable to break down, and the young lawyer plumed himself on a certain acquittal. The jury retired, and five minutes later was back in court. "Have you agreed on a verdict?" asked the judge. "We hev," answered the foreman, as he shifted a gun he carried on his hip. "We find the defendant not guilty, an' recommend the defendant's lawyer, owin' to his youth an' innocence, to the mercy of the court."—San Francisco Wave.

The Shekel Earned.

That which we work for and win by earnest effort is doubly our own and carries with it its wisdom. Thus a man who inherits a fortune seldom puts it to the best or wisest uses. In order to learn the wise and beneficent use of money one must have toiled for it coin by coin, must have some time suffered the want of it. A man born with a golden spoon in his mouth never tastes either pain or happiness as these are known to the common man. He has not felt the great danger of desire which gives to fulfillments its exquisite flavor. Not having struggled in the fight, he knows nothing of the joy of victory.—Woman's Home Companion.

PE-RU-NA

FOR WOMEN

The debilitating drains and discharges which weaken so many women are caused by Catarrh of the distinctly feminine organs. The sufferer may call her trouble Leuchorrhoea, or Weakness, or Female Disease or some other name, but the real trouble is catarrh of the female organs and nothing else.

Pe-ru-na radically and permanently cures this and all other forms of Catarrh. It is a positive specific for female troubles caused by catarrh of the delicate lining of the organs peculiar to women. It always cures if used persistently. It is prompt and certain.

The microbes that cause chills and fever and malaria enter the system through mucous membranes made porous by catarrh. Pe-ru-na heals the mucous membranes and prevents the entrance of malarial germs, thus preventing and curing these affections.

Defeating a Privateer.

The New England privateer contests in the long ago gave a distinguished officer of the royal navy his first opportunity. Charles Wager was the nephew of John Hull, a Newport merchant. He was with his uncle in one of his vessels when she was threatened by a French or Spanish privateer. There is a well-attested tradition that Wager, only a lad, but high-mettled, persuaded the peaceful, non-resident owner to retire to the cabin and give him control of the vessel.

Charles mustered the crew—they were always armed—and handled them so bravely and skillfully that the attacking party was baffled. The old Quaker's anxiety prevailed over his principles, and coming into the companionway, he stood taking snuff and watching the fight. As he was below the level of the combatants, he could well see the effect of the firing.

His interest grew and his excitement waxed high as the contest went on. He took pinch after pinch of snuff in most wasteful fashion; his usually immaculate waistcoat became recklessly powdered. Finally he cried out:

"Charles, if thee means to hit that man in a red jacket, thee had better raise thy piece a little!"

The attack was repulsed, and the gallant Charles was commended by his uncle with, "Thee did well, Charles, thee did well, but fighting is wrong. Still, Charles, if thee had let them whip, I could have flung thee overboard."

Through his friends Wager obtained a post in the royal navy, ending his honorable career as Sir Charles Wager, first lord of the admiralty, and finally with a monument in Westminster Abbey.

Important Information for Men and Women.

For those who are accustomed to sending away from home for their goods it is of the greatest importance to know the character and reliability of the establishments selling goods to families from catalogues. The great emporium of the John M. Smyth Co., located at 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, has been established for a third of a century, and has furnished over a half a million homes in Chicago and vicinity alone. This firm enjoys the confidence of the public by its many years of fair dealing. It issues an immense illustrated catalogue that should be in every family, as it describes and gives the price of every article required for household use. A sample of the extraordinary values offered by this firm is shown in the illustration of the gentlemen's overcoats in another column of this paper. These garments are indeed wonderful values, and yet they are but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the beautiful catalogue of the John M. Smyth Company.

Cause of the Kettle's Song.

People often wonder what makes the high note of a simmering tea kettle, but the explanation is simple. As the water heats little bubbles of steam are formed at the bottom of the kettle. These rush upward and, being attracted to the sides of the kettle, they make a commotion which sets the metal in vibration and the kettle "sings."

Mrs. Col. Richardson SAVED BY MRS. PINKHAM.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 72,896]

"You have saved my life, snatched me from the brink of the grave almost, and I wish to thank you. About eighteen months ago I was a total wreck, physically. I had been troubled with leucorrhœa for some time, but had given hardly any attention to the trouble.

"At last inflammation of the womb and ovaries resulted and then I suffered agonies, had to give up my profession (musician and piano player), was confined to my bed and life became a terrible cross. My husband summoned the best physicians, but their benefit was but temporary at best. I believe I should have contracted the morphine habit under their care, if my common sense had not intervened.

"One day my husband noticed the advertisement of your remedies and immediately bought me a full trial. Soon the pain in my ovaries was gone. I am now well, strong and robust, walk, ride a wheel, and feel like a girl in her teens. I would not be without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it is like water of life to me. I am very gratefully and sincerely your well-wisher, and I heartily recommend your remedies. I hope some poor creature may be helped to health by reading my story."—MRS. COL. E. P. RICHARDSON, RHINELANDER, WIS.

If you had the pictures of our children, you could see at a glance that the last one is healthiest, prettiest and finest-looking of them all. My wife thinks Mother's Friend is the greatest and grandest remedy in the world for expectant mothers."—Written by a Kentucky Attorney-at-Law.

MOTHER'S FRIEND prevents nine-tenths of the suffering incident to childbirth. The coming mother's disposition and temper remain unruffled throughout the ordeal, because this relaxing, penetrating liniment relieves the usual distress. A good-natured mother is pretty sure to have a good-natured child. The patient is kept in a strong, healthy condition, which the child also inherits. Mother's Friend takes a wife through the crisis quickly and almost painlessly. It assists in her rapid recovery, and wards off the dangers that so often follow delivery.

How To Gain Flesh

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day by taking an ounce of SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is strange, but it often happens.

Somehow the ounce produces the pound; it seems to start the digestive machinery going properly, so that the patient is able to digest and absorb his ordinary food, which he could not do before, and that is the way the gain is made.

A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health; if you have not got it you can get it by taking

Scott's Emulsion

You will find it just as useful in summer as in winter, and if you are thriving upon it don't stop because the weather is warm.

A VICIOUS BRUTE.

Terrible Fight at Albion with a Mad Jack.

[Albion New Era.]

Last Thursday about noon Dr. Cameron, the veterinary surgeon, went into the pen where he had his jack tied to care for him. While he was in a partly stooping position, the animal unexpectedly and without warning made for him, one foot striking him on the head and one on the limb, and with his mouth grabbed the doctor in the side with such force as to break one rib and possibly a second. This knocked the doctor down, where he was securely held, the jack placing one knee on the doctor's leg and holding onto his side with the viciousness and tenacity of a bull dog. The doctor reached for the jack's tongue, which he caught, and so twisted that the jack let loose of his hold on his side, but drew the doctor's hand up into his mouth, where he caught the fleshy part of the thumb, just where it joins the hand, between his incisors and brought them together This securely held his hand, for to draw it out would mean the probable tearing off of his thumb. When first attacked the doctor yelled for help and told Mr Charles Ingraham, who first arrived, to get his gun and shoot the animal, as it would not be safe for him to enter the pen At about the same time the doctor's faithful shepherd dogs arrived and went to his assistance. One of them grabbed the jack in the fore leg, and in his efforts to strike the dog, the jack fell. The jack arose and a second time the dog caught him and threw him to the ground. In fighting the dogs, the jack let loose of the doctor's hand so that the doctor could get up, and he had reached the fence when the jack arose and again started for him, but the dog took the jack again in the same place, throwing him, this time one dog catching the jack by the throat when he was down and another on the neck, and made the fight sufficiently interesting for the jack that the doctor was safely on the outside before the dogs let loose. Dr. Morr was summoned and dressed the wounds, which consisted of a badly lacerated thumb and side, a broken rib, injuries to his head and limbs, and there may be internal injuries. The wounds are very painful.

The Older Book.

We recently spoke of an old book printed in 1802. Now, we have one printed in 1747, which makes it 152 years ago. It is the property of Mrs. Ed. Ross and came into her possession from her father the late J. H. VanAuken of Pleasant Lake. It is emphatically a book of scientific research and study, being divided into parts treating on different subjects. One is on geography and is illustrated with queer maps, giving such outlines as were then known. For example, the present United States is mainly shown as "New France" as the English then had only the present Atlantic States. But in general contour, the maps are correct. On each is an illuminated, ornamental shield on which the author dedicates them to "his majesty, the king." The then reigning king of England, was George the Second, who reigned until 1760. Other parts of the book are devoted to Astronomy, History, Geometry. Chronology, Drawing and Rhetoric. It all shows the author to be a great student and master of about all the knowledge then extant. The print is of the old kind with the letter "s" looking like an "f" in all places except final "s."

Free of Charge.

Any adult suffering from a cold settled on the breast, bronchitis, throat or lung troubles of any nature, who will call on O. P. Raber, Corunna, will be presented with a sample bottle of Boschee's German Syrup, free of charge. Only just one bottle given to one person, and none to children without order from parents.

No throat or lung remedy ever had such a sale as Boschee's German Syrup in all parts of the civilized world. Twenty years ago millions of bottles were given away, and your druggists will tell you its success was marvelous. It is really the only Throat and Lung Remedy generally endorsed by physicians. One 75 cent bottle will cure or prove its value. Sold by dealers in all civilized countries. 2

Runs in the Family.

"Gee Line's" son must have been at Waterloo about the time the father was here. The Press says:

Mr. Martin of Toledo, son of his father, who has a record in this vicinity, having lived here several years ago, was in town last Friday, enroute "from attending his grandfather's funeral," and he is a great, strapping, strong fellow. However, he was disposed to beg for money and he made good wages, although several efforts failed him. He ought to have been kicked out of town for an impostor and for securing money under false pretenses.

My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." Omitted Items.

In our published statement of the appropriations made by the county council we omitted the allowance for free gravel roads, which the council raised from $50 to $65. We also had the Auditor as receiving $2,100 when it should have been $2,500. The county rate was 50½ cents in 1897; 44½ last year and 30½ this year.

It is a mighty step in advance when a great railroad corporation feels the need of an order like the following: San Francisco, Cal., June 1. One of the most sweeping orders ever issued by a railroad company in this country concerning the behavior and well being of its employes became effective today along the entire Southern Pacific system. It forbids the sale of liquor in restaurants connected with the depots where such restaurants are rented from the railroad companies. As nearly every restaurant along the road if rented from the railroad company the order has a very wide scope, the main purpose of the innovation is to prevent the trainmen from drinking while on duty. At the same time the order will cut off a large portion of the revenue of the railroad company, for at the many stations along the road rents for restaurants have largely increased after the proprietors have obtained licenses to sell liquors.

The first woman's convention ever held in Bermuda was that of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Hamilton. Delegates and visitors were present from six unions all of which have been organized during the last six months by Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, an organizer of the world's W. C. T. U. Mrs. Field held 154 meetings during their stay there and will leave them well prepared to carry on aggressive work.

The eight principal causes of insanity have been tabulated and the result presented to a London scientific society. Drink stands at the top and directly accounts for about one-third of all the cases. Indirectly it probably accounts for about as many more.

All honor to Tufts college, Massachusetts. We learn that the trustees of that institution have recently refused $10,000 from a prominent Boston brewer, on the ground that to accept it would close the mouth of the college on the temperance question.

AND IT WAS SIMPLY AWFUL,

The Way Auburn's Ball Team Cleaned up the Kendallville Aggregation.

One of the largest crowds ever seen at a ball game in Auburn saw the contest(?) last Saturday afternoon between Kendallville and Auburn, the third between the two teams. The game was a great disappointment (to Kendallville) but the home team put up a game that is not often excelled by amateurs, and at no time after the first inning was there any doubt as to the result. An unpleasant incident of the game was the forced retirement in the first inning of Umpire Holtzer of Kendallville whose decisions were so palpably unfair that even his own friends were free to confess that he was decidedly "off his trolley." Mr. Thomas of that place was substituted and his decisions gave universal satisfaction, as did those of Capt. Labnum, the umpire for Auburn.

The home team went to bat first and it was soon evident that Mr. Inks, who was in the box for Kendallville, was an easy mark. The first four innings netted Auburn thirteen runs, while Kendallville could only secure three. In the second "Goody" Henderson, Auburn's star third baseman, made a home run, and during the next two the hits off Inks were so numerous that he retired and was succeeded by Prentice. The change did not improve matters, however, seventeen runs being added to Auburn's score in the fifth and eighth innings. While very tiresome the game had some redeeming features, among which were the double plays from Treesh to Berg, hard batting and fine base running by Auburn, and the fly catch by shortstop Prentice in the first inning when he got the ball while lying on his back after a fall. As before stated Auburn put up a fine game both in the field and at the bat, making twenty five hits for a total of thirty-five bases. But five errors were charged to Auburn, and none of these were very costly. Kendallville played a very loose game in the field and were unable to make much headway against Roan's delivery. The game was called at the end of the eighth inning on account of darkness with the score as follows:

CHAPTER VIII.

There are days and days, when a certain ex-official is not busy and he now and then joins the galaxy in the lovely pavilion on the public square.

Recently, as the forenoon's stories were running low, he pulled from a pocket in the west half of the southwest quarter of section one of his pants, a postal card that he had received, as he claimed, not long ago. He held it up to the light, adjusted his specs, and at the request of the House read the card, which was as follows:

WARNING.

CHICAGO, June 14.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—There are two, possibly three counterfeit turks now masquerading through the country and wrestling under the name of Hali Adall, conqueror of the mighty Yousouf, the "Sultan's Lion." They get into a community garbed in the oriental attire of the Turkish champion, ape his manner and then delude the public into the belief that the real champion is about to appear in a wrestling match. Tom Cannon and Antonio Pierre, who formerly controlled Hali, are somewhere in the west now with one of Hali's Turkish garments. The undersigned will esteem it a personal favor if notified of the contemplated presence of these counterfeits. Wire at my expense, and an injunction will issue through the United States Courts immediately on receipt of information. All expenses will be paid. Yours truly,

L. M. HOUSEMAN,
Sporting Editor Inter Ocean.

At the left end of this card is a picture of the "turbaned Turk," evidently the real one, for underneath are printed the words. "This is a good picture of the genuine Turk. Others are counterfeits, and should be prosecuted."

"I showed this picture to Dave Caruth," said the ex official, "and he said it was probably the picture of a real Turk. In fact it reminded him of the Turk who took the tickets at the entrance to the hoochee-coochee building at the Fort Wayne street carnival last year." Several, here, started in to dispute with him about fancied resemblance when Dave shut them up by asking, innocently, "How do you know so much about that Turk? Were you at the hoochee show?" They suddenly concluded that Dave might be right after all, at least they had ceased to feel certain about it. One wanted to leave it to the decision of the COURIER Editor. But that worthy did not happen to be present.

But the man with the card put it back into the aforesaid pocket, and later on gave it to the editor where anyone who thinks he knows the Turk, can see it.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, skin eruptions and wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate the stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming, woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's Drug Store.

OBITUARY

Samuel Mochamer was born April 23, 1834, in Wayne county, Ohio. When a child he came with his parents to DeKalb county, Ind., where he spent his life. He was one of the pioneers of this county and endured the privation and hardships of early life in this country. Some time ago he went to visit Mr. Milas Brown, where he took sick shortly afterward, and continued getting worse, until life went out last Monday morning, Sept. 11, 1899, at the age of sixty-five years, four months and eighteen days. Mr. Mochamer leaves to mourn his death four sisters and many other friends. The funeral service was held at the home of Milas Brown, about five miles east of Auburn, yesterday September 12, at 2 p. m. Interment took place in Bear Creek cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating.

From Puget Sound.

EDITOR COURIER:—There is at present great excitement and unparallelled activity at this point on account of the warlike preparations of this and the British government, which for the past four months have spent millions of dollars in equipping three new forts which command the entrance to Puget Sound. These forts are situated on three sides of Port Townsend and they are now mounting the most powerful cannon on points made impregnable by vast cement breastworks. It is now believed that no hostile fleet could run the gauntlet of these forts. And not more than twenty miles to the northwest the British are daily at target practice with their most powerful engines of destruction. The deep, thundering tones of their war vessels roar and reverbrate over these green hills and make the glass in our houses tremble. It reminds us of what actual conflict would be and makes us wish that no two such great nations as England and America may never see fit to fight, as the carnage would be awful. Just now they are quarreling over the Alaska boundary line and the exclusion act; Johnny Bull always getting the best of the dispute. There is a railroad boom now on here. They are connecting this peninsula with the east by rail and this will give a new impetus to our wild, but fertile land. But Uncle Sam has set bounds to the settlement of this peninsula by creating a vast timber reserve here nearly one hundred miles square where no settler will ever be allowed to enter in. So the Olympic mountains will always remain unsettled. We had a very wet summer this year, but the crops are all doing fine. We all enjoy the best of health, are contented and happy and send your many readers our best regards.—JOSEPH A. SHADE.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE EARTH.

An Important Record of the Week As Told by the Telegraph—Latest from Foreign Shores—Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Etc.

A LONE HIGHWAYMAN

Holds Up a Crowded Stage Coach in California.

The Canistoga and Lake Port stage was held up near Napa, Cal., by a solitary highwayman, who made off with the express box.

Coming suddenly around a curve the stage driver was confronted by a masked robber, who covered him with his shotgun and ordered him to stop. The passengers were then commanded to dismount from the stage and were drawn up in a row while the highwayman abstracted the express box of Wells-Fargo & Co., but left the United States mail bag. The highwayman then turned his attention to the row of eight frightened passengers, whom he commanded to deposit on the ground their money and valuables. About $75 in cash was secured from the passengers, in addition to watches, chains and trinkets.

Woman Burned to Death.

Mrs. Catherine Kennedy was burned to death, several persons were injured and forty families were rendered homeless by a fire in three tenements at Lantic avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The fire was caused by the explosion of a lamp. When the firemen arrived the house was burning furiously and a panic was in progress. The inmates were rescued by ladders. Mrs. Kennedy was hemmed in by flames on the top floor and was burned to a crisp. The loss is $75,000.

Effective Work by the Gunboat Paragua.

Admiral Watson cables the Naval Department of the effective work done by the little gunboat Paragua, as follows; "Davidson commanding the Paragua, reports a sharp engagement at Bolenao. The vessel was struck many times by rifle shots, but there was no casualties, and they silenced the insurgents' fire in twenty minutes. The occasion was the capture of the Filipinos' schooner, which Davidson destroyed."

Willing to Compromise.

The Boston Post announces that it has received the following private dispatch from Paris:

"Gens. Roget and Mercier have offered on the part of the army to demand from President Loubet the pardon of Capt. Dreyfus, if the Jewish committee will drop the matter, and on condition that Dreyfus shall live away from the large cities of France for three years."

Mother and Child Burned.

At Cleveland, Ohio, Angeline Maskatine, aged 15 years, started the fire with gasoline and was immediately enveloped in flames. The mother attempted to rescue the child and was fatally burned. Their screams were heart-rending. Both died soon after the accident. Joseph Maskatine, the girl's father, was badly burned in attempting to help the women. He will recover.

Saves Life of a Soldier

An official order has been published by which the President saves the life of a soldier, Private McVeigh, of the Wyoming Volunteers, who was sentenced in the Philippines to be shot for striking a superior officer. The President commuted his sentence to three years imprisonment and dishonorable discharge.

Fatal Call.

Two men were killed and two injured in a collision on the Pittsburgh, Virginia and Charleston Railroad, near Baird Station, Pa., between the pay train and a freight train. The accident was caused by a misunderstanding of orders.

Transport Tartar Released.

The British authorities at Hong Kong have released the transport Tartar. The following dispatch was received at Washington Friday morning: "Clearance allowed; sails to-day." Signed "Metcalf."

Over a Million Hebrews.

The American Jewish Year Book, just issued, estimates the Jewish population at 1,043,000. New York has 400,000, Illinois 95,000, Pennsylvania 95,000, Ohio 50,000, California 35,000, Maryland 35,000 and Missouri 35,000.

Biggest Ocean Steamer Afloat.

The steamer Oceanic has arrived at New York from Liverpool, completing her maiden trip. She is the biggest ocean steamer afloat. No attempt was made to beat the record.

Four Men Killed.

Two freight trains on the Rock Island collided near Oxford, Iowa. Engineer T. Quinn, Fireman A. M. Polson and two tramps were killed.

Coal Famine in Iowa.

Iowa is face to face with a coal famine. The mines of the State are unable to fill orders and the railroads, which usually have immense stocks on hand at this season, are very short. The reason is that the mine operators are unable to secure laborers.

Railroad Wreck.

A passenger train on the Lima Northern struck a herd of horses south of Leipsic, Ohio, and the engine and baggage car were ditched. The engineer and fireman were both injured and scalded.

Gets Sampson's Post.

Admiral Sampson will be relieved from command of the North Atlantic squadron shortly after the Dewey celebration in New York and will be succeeded in command Oct. 10 by Rear Admiral Norman H. Farquhar, commandant of the Norfolk navy yard.

New South Wales Ministry Resigns.

At Sydney, N. S. W., Right. Hon. George Houston Reid, the premier, treasurer and minister of railways, and the other members of the cabinet resigned in consequence of the action of the assembly, which passed a resolution declaring a lack of confidence in the ministry.

STRENGTH IN AUTUMN TRADE.

Price Situation One of Notable Strength—Cereals Are Higher.

Bradstreet's commercial report says: "Strength of staple prices, activity in fall demand, large railroad earnings, reports of heavy lake traffic and of activity in leading industries are the features, none of them necessarily new, but still presenting themselves in the trade situation this week. Expansion in fall demand is perhaps most notable at the leading western and northwestern markets, but advices from eastern markets furnish evidence that active interest is manifested at these centers. The price situation is one of notable strength. Cereals are generally higher. The hot weather in the West is responsible for a further shading in exuberant estimates of the corn crop and for the slight strengthening in prices shown therein. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 4,353,906 bushels, against 3,613,443 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 4,786,873 bushels, against 4,167,808 bushels last week."

CITY OFFICIAL ASSASSINATED.

St. Louis Huckster Follows the Murder by Killing Himself.

Assistant Park Commissioner Frederick W. Pape was assassinated on the front porch of his home at St. Louis, in the presence of his 10-year-old son William, by Henry Fry, huckster. Immediately after the killing Fry ran to his wagon and drove away. Pape's boy followed his father's slayer on a hard run down the street. Two blocks had been traversed when the wagon came to a standstill. There was a pistol report and William Pape saw the man fall back from his seat into the bed of the wagon. He rushed to the place and after making certain that the huckster was dead hurried back to see if he could be of assistance to his father. When the physicians arrived at the city official's home he was dead. Before he fired at Pape Fry had asked him why he did not obtain a huckster's license for him free. When Pape explained that he could not do so the shooting followed.

MUTINY IN A PENITENTIARY.

Plan to Kill Officials and Release Convicts Is Frustrated.

The Kansas penitentiary, four miles south of Leavenworth, was the scene of a desperate, carefully planned attempt to murder officials and release over 100 convicts. A year ago two notorious convicts named Harper and Gilbert, while at work in the warden's office, stole two revolvers. Owing to the vigilance of the preceding administration no chance for a mutiny presented itself. They made a key to open the south cell house. The revolvers and key were overlooked through the laxity of the search on inspection day. A trusty who learned of the plan was almost killed because he threatened to notify the authorities. The trusty dragged himself to the guards and told them of the plan. Harper and Gilbert were opening the cells. There was a fierce struggle, shots were exchanged and the convicts were overpowered.

Men in a position to know, however, say that $10,000 was secured. The trainmen say the bandits were heavily loaded with booty as they rode away.

PAID TO KILL A MILLIONAIRE.

Australian Crook Talks of a Plot to Murder a Colorado Man.

Jack Casey, an Australian crook, who is confined in the San Francisco city prison, has confessed to the police that Howard, alias Hill, the Australian plunger, gave him $5,000 to dispose of Millionaire Green of Colorado on the last outward voyage of the steamship Alameda. The police are looking for Howard on a charge of swindling Green out of $100,000 on a bogus deal in Australian land. Before Howard disappeared Green, through threats of prosecution, made the plunger give up $52,000. According to Casey, Howard engaged him and two pals, named Kelly and Murphy, to knock Green on the head when the Alameda neared Honolulu and throw the body overboard. The three thugs took passage with Green as agreed. Casey received the $5,000 from Howard in a water front saloon just before the Alameda sailed. He intended giving Howard the slip on the dock, but the latter kept such close watch that Casey was forced to go on board. He divided the $5,000 with Kelly and Murphy on board the Alameda. As the steamer was passing out of the harbor Casey says he leaped overboard and was picked up by a boatman and landed on the dock. Casey's story is borne out by his landlady.

TALK ON THE TRUSTS.

THE CONFERENCE ON COMBINES OPENS IN CHICAGO.

Assembly Notable for the Diversity of Ideas and Interests Represented—The Transport Tartar Is Permitted to Clear from Hong Kong.

When Franklin H. Head, president of the Civic Federation of Chicago, called to order the national conference on trusts and combinations Wednesday morning not all the seats in Central Music Hall were taken. Many delegates had not arrived in Chicago. Much time was taken up in perfecting an organization after the introductory addresses by President Head of the Civic Federation, Dr. Howard S. Taylor, representing Chicago, and Attorney General Akin, representing Illinois.

Thirty-five States were represented, the calling of names occupying one hour's time. It was afternoon before any move was made toward preparing a program or permanent organization. As soon as President Head announced that the meeting was now in the hands of the convention it became apparent there was to be a clash in the selection of a committee on program. First came a motion, which was lost, that a delegate from each State be appointed to form the committee on program.

It was unanimously decided that the committee on program be comprised of one delegate from each State appointed by the Governors and from each organization represented, said committee to be selected by delegates in private conference at the midday adjournment of the convention. This matter being settled, President Head announced that the Civic Federation had already prepared the morning program in two papers, short ones, to be read by Prof. Jeremiah W. Jenks and Prof. Henry Carter Adams on "Problems Before the Conference," and requested the indulgence of the conference to hear them before the morning adjournment.

The first day's sessions of the conference on combinations and trusts proved conclusively the widespread interest in the subject of discussion, as well as the breadth of information, the variety of opinion and the diversity of aim on the part of the delegates. It made it clear that the conference met a great national need, and that whether it results in recommendations for legislation or not, it will be in every sense a success. The three sessions of the conference developed impassioned arraignments of trusts, and equally vigorous defenses of them. The day was more notable, however, for the thorough and scholarly statement of the many problems to be met by college men who have long given the subject careful study. The conference was organized by the delegates themselves, and taken out of the hands of the Civic Federation. Of the permanent officers elected more were opposed to trusts than favorable to them. It appeared that the majority of the delegates believed that the trusts were evil in many of their effects, but also that they believed these evils could be removed by constructive legislation. On the whole, the proceedings fulfilled every requirement of fair and free discussion. Anti-trust delegates perfected an informal separate organization in the evening, but there was no indication that any one faction desired to secure an unfair advantage over the others in the control of the conference.

Attendance at Thursday's session was much larger than Wednesday. Many prominent delegates arrived during the night and were given seats at the opening of the morning session.

The great national conference on combinations and trusts has met with the most sanguine expectations of the promoters, the officers of the Civic Federation of Chicago. Although many leading lights, who were expected to attend, failed to put in an appearance, the distinguished gathering at Central Music Hall fully justified the great purpose for which it was intended. This great meeting, attended by this country's most distinguished statesmen, orators and deep thinkers, will be handed down in history as one of the most notable gatherings in the nineteenth century.

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

KRUGER IN FULL REGALIA.

Paul Kruger, President of the South African Republic, is the man of the hour. Oom Paul, as everybody calls him, is a unique figure in history. Bismarck called him the greatest natural diplomat he had ever met. Although a dictator he lives in democratic simplicity in his own house in Pretoria. He rises at break of day, and after his cup of coffee and daily Bible reading, steps out upon the porch to greet his regular morning audience, which begins to accumulate before sun up. He goes to the Government buildings at 9, attended by a bodyguard of six armed policemen. Returning at 4, he sits on the veranda, smoking his old wooden pipe. His only beverage is coffee, and of this he drinks a great deal. "When I am thirsty I drink coffee and smoke; when I am thinking I smoke and drink coffee," he says. His religious creed is austere, but simple. Whatever God sends is right and must be endured without a murmur.

THE AWAKENING OF JUSTICE IN FRANCE.

TARTAR IS RELEASED.

Transport Allowed to Clear by the British Authorities.

Clearance papers have been allowed the Tartar at Hong Kong. It is supposed clearance was allowed upon the suggestion of the British foreign office to the British governor at Hong Kong that it would be unwise to interfere with American transports.

The War Department was officially notified Wednesday morning of the detention at Hong Kong by the British authorities of the transport Tartar, which they claimed to be overcrowded with men. Gen. Otis cabled the facts. The captain of the vessel also cabled from Hong Kong.

The Tartar is a British vessel and shows the British ensign over her stern to indicate her nationality, although the United States army transport flag flies at her masthead. Her regular service was between Victoria and Hong Kong. It is declared that her charter by the United States Government divested her of her mercantile character and made her, for the time being, a regular American war vessel, and as such, under the Geneva convention, entitled to full extra territoriality throughout the world.

Officials in Washington deny that Great Britain has any jurisdiction over the transport Tartar, and Ambassador Choate was cabled to make strong representations to the British Government on the subject. Overcrowding is also denied, it being pointed out that remodeling the ship increased her passenger accommodations by 50 per cent.

An informal understanding has been reached for a temporary agreement on the Alaskan boundary. The boundary line is to form a temporary barrier only, and its location will not prejudice the Government case of either country. The modus vivendi provides for a line running just northward of Kluckwan, and it bars out Canada entirely from the Lynn canal. Arrangements of a temporary character may yet be made, however, to permit the Canadians to get their goods across the border, but the protocol as now drawn does not provide for such a free port. The boundary line under the modus vivendi is a slight concession to Canada, but it is still far inside of the British claim and is in substance the American line.

Chinese missionaries, some of them at present at home, are back of a scheme to transplant a modern sawmill from New York State to Wu Hu, China. American, English and Chinese residents of Wu Hu are said to take kindly to the proposition, and Li Hung Chang is quoted as having given his consent, and along with it a check for $2,000 for stock in the new enterprise. There is no modern sawmill in all China, and lumber is sawed there by the most antiquated methods. It is said that the value of the proposed mill as an object lesson for the natives will be important, and that for this reason the Government is looking upon the plan with favor.

The net gold and bullion, including $100,000,000 reserved for redemption of United States notes, as reported at the Treasury Department on that day was $251,618,132. The amount never reached $200,000,000 until August last year, when it was a little more than $217,000,000. The actual amount of gold coin in the treasury Thursday was $195,812,840, and of gold bullion $128,904,321, making a total of $324,717,661, against which gold certificates to the value of $73,099,529 are outstanding.

He will endeavor to make it hold out until Congress meets in December, when the Navy Department will submit a deficiency estimate of fully $3,000,000 to carry the work on until July, 1900.

The blanks for writing the names in the Cuban census are twice as large as the blanks for the same purpose in this country. This grows out of the fact that the Spanish names are usually about twice as long as American and English names. Section Furnishes More Volunteers than Does the North.

Adjutant General Corbin is making up a statement showing the contributions of the various States and territories to the volunteer army. He makes the surprising announcement that Georgia has furnished more volunteers than any other State in the country, her quota exceeding that of Illinois by nearly 200 men. He says that in general the South has furnished more men relative to population than the North. The District of Columbia has furnished the largest percentage of any State or territory compared with its population. Among the Northern States Massachusetts leads, while Wisconsin makes an exceedingly poor showing.

WHEN THE COWS COME HOME.

"Clink, clink, clink-clink, a clinkety-clink"—
Through the ragged brush of the pasture path,
And the "old boss" stops at the brook to drink,
And tosses her head with a jest of wrath.
With hoofs sunk deep in the brook's black loam,
And muzzle deep in the lazy stream,
She waits for the laggard herd to come,
With ears that droop and eyes that dream.
Her sleek sides bulge with contentedness,
And her udders drip with an overflow
That blotches with white the water-cress
That sags in the current, to and fro.

The eddies whirl where her long tail flings
Its tufted end with a listless toss,
And the gurgling water swings and sings
Like whirling wings in the brookside moss.
As the water clears of its muddy roil,
And the "old boss" drinks, with nostrils flared,
The dusk, slow stealing, mile on mile,
Grows dark where the deep woods stand ensnared,
And out of the twilight's hazy height,
Where the dog-star loiters, white and dim,
A drifting swallow pipes good-night.

Then, drowsily, with a soul-deep breath,
The "old boss" raises her head and sighs,
And bright as a sword from its guarding sheath
The sunset gleams in her glowing eyes.
It turns the bell at her throat to gold,
And silvers the red of her silken coat,
And the telltale leaves of the year grown old
Turn pale in the pools where they lie afloat.
Out of the silence, shrill and high,
A voice of the farm-yard quavers through,
"Come, 'boss!' come, 'boss!' come, 'boss!'" its cry,
And the "old boss" softly answers "Moo!"

Only the call of the cow—that's all;
Only a wistful moo, and yet
It seems that I heard my childhood call—
And the dusk is here and my eyes are wet.

That Suit Case.

RUTH KENYON was talking earnestly to to the girl who sat next her in the train from Northampton one June day.

"No; everything is over between John Baker and me," she was saying vehemently. "Frances, I sent that gentleman an invitation to the junior prom. two months ago, and he not only never answered the letter, but went to the prom. with another girl. Such rudeness! I sent back all his presents and never want to see him again. But, for that matter, I suppose I shall, as I get home. He lives just next door, and always goes home as soon as college is out."

"Why, Ruth," suddenly ejaculated her friend, looking out of the window. "Here's your station. Hurry, dear, or you'll be late. Good-by, and we'll meet again at Smith in September."

"Poor John Baker, Jr.! I pity him when they meet," she added to herself, as she watched Ruth seize her umbrella and suit case and hurry off the car.

Farrington, the driver of the old yellow coach that connected the little out-of-the-way town of Thorndale with the rest of the world, was looking up and down the platform. His old eyes brightened when he saw Ruth. "Ben hopin' yer'd come on that train," he cried, taking her baggage checks. "Jump right in. There's only one other passenger, and I reckon you know him."

He opened the coach door and the girl stepped in. With a crack of the whip they were off, almost before Ruth had time to recognize in her fellow passenger—John Baker, Jr.

"Good evening," she said, coldly.

"Good evening," was his equally chilly reply. John Baker became at once absorbed in the evening's news. The coach jolted on over hills and hollows.

"'Pears to me," remarked old Farrington, putting his head in the window, "ye ain't got so much to say to each other as usual. Your folks goin' to meet yer at the village, Miss Ruth?"

"They don't expect me to-night," Ruth answered brightly. "But Jerry always comes down about this time for the mail, and I shall ride back with him."

"John goin' with yer?"

"If he likes," she said, stiffly.

"I shall walk to-night. I'm not going directly home," came decidedly from John Baker, buried behind his paper.

"Oho!" said Farrington, softly. He shook his head once or twice, but said no more. "Don't see your wagon hereabouts," Miss Ruth," he ventured to remark as he handed down her suit case at the end of the route.

"It will be right along, and I'm in no hurry." And she sat down on the post-office steps to wait. John Baker strode off without a word.

Ten minutes passed, but no wagon came. After a time the postmistress came to the door. "You ain't waiting for your Jerry, I hope, Miss Kenyon," she said, "for he said this morning he wasn't coming again to-day."

"Thank you," replied the girl, with rather a vexed laugh. "Then I must walk." She picked up her suit case and started down the long, dusty road. The spirits of our college girl drooped as she plodded on in the hot summer twilight, from time to time shifting from one hand to the other her heavy dress suit case. She began to think resentfully of all she had crammed into it at the last moment, particularly of seventeen different photographs of the same Yale senior, all of them dated before that junior prom.

Then there was a sharp step behind her. Looking quickly back, she confronted—John Baker.

"Ruth," he said angrily, "they told me you had started, so I followed. This is no place for a girl to be alone." He glanced about at the gathering darkness. "Let me carry that suit case; it's too heavy for you."

Ruth Kenyon suddenly straightened like a ramrod, and her eyes flashed, but she made no answer. John Baker's wrath blazed higher. "Miss Kenyon, I must find out what all this outrageous treatment of me means. I will not stand it any longer!"

"I will not discuss that matter now, Mr. Baker," she broke in. Baker wiped a perspiring brow and gave up in despair.

The walk seemed endless, but at last the Kenyon house appeared at the end of a long pasture, which was separated from the road by a high stone wall. Before John Baker noticed what she was going to do, Ruth had turned, placed her suit case on top of the wall, and climbed up herself.

How it happened neither of them clearly knew. Instantly there was a rolling sound, a crash, and a moment later John was over the wall, lifting the girl's prostrate figure from the ground. In his excitement he forgot everything except that the girl he loved lay motionless before him.

"Ruth," he cried brokenly, "are you hurt badly? Speak, dear." At his words she staggered to her feet. "I'm not hurt much. That case made me slip," she said, but her lips were pale and trembling. "Thank you," she added, as he handed her a letter which lay on the ground where she had fallen. In the bright moonlight she read the address written in her own handwriting, Mr. John Baker, Jr., Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

"John," she cried, suddenly facing him. "Light a match." And a minute later "John Baker," she sobbed, "it was all my fault. I thought you weren't a gentleman for not answering my invitation to the junior promenade, when I never mailed the letter. It must have been in that suit case all the time. Can we ever be frineds again, John?"

"No," he answered, springing forward with a cry of joy. "We can't be simply friends. It's got to be something more than friends this time, Ruth."

John Baker paused on his front door step before going in that night to look up at a bright light in the house next door. "Poor girl, she did hurt herself," he said gently. "And it was all on account of that plaguey suit case. But I was desperate, and it gave me a chance to tell her how I feel about us two, any way." He laughed softly, then opened the door and went in.—Boston Post.

Cancer Causes Many Deaths.

Physicians generally are very properly alarmed at and at the same time puzzled to find the cause of the large increase in the number of deaths in recent years from cancerous disease. It is a singular fact that women are by far the greatest sufferers from this awful complaint because it particularly affects many of them for physiological reasons. Hence, though men give themselves cancer in the throat and tongue by the smoke habit that women as a sex have happily not yet acquired, men die in considerably less numbers than women from this, perhaps the very worst of all the odious tribe of mortal diseases. That it is quite time to draw the attention of the lay public to this opprobium of medicine is clear when we read the figures given by an oddly named but necessary "cancer society." In the last thirty-five years the annual cancer mortality has increased from 8,117 to 24,443—that is, from 385 per 1,000,000 of the population to 787 per 1,000,000. Now, a fact like this undoubtedly has a cause. What is it? The importance of the question to women is seen when it is added that the victims in the last year returned, 1897, were over 14,00 females to 9,000-odd males.

Their Favorite Colors.

The Sultan of Turkey's favorite color is dark red. The German Emperor likes his uniforms of blue and red, and covered with gold embroideries. The King of Greece, who dons his uniforms as seldom as possible, has a marked preference for light colors. The Emperor of Austria has a preference for gray, while the Emperor of Russia likes dark green uniforms, and the King of Italy, excepting the rare occasions when he appears in a general's uniform, generally wears black.

WOMEN BRICKLAYERS.

A Mother and Her Two Daughters Build Their Own Home.

Three women—a mother and her two daughters—are building their own home in Chicago. It is to be a brick house and already the walls are nearing completion.

Eight years ago the Liebegut family went to Chicago from Ostprisens, Germany. They were the father and mother and two little girls. They were poor, but they were resolved to have their own home—their very own. They worked hard, all of them, to buy a little strip of land, whereon to build. The girls were meanwhile growing large and strong, "not," as the mother put it, "like American girls."

Marie Liebegut is 18 years of age and Gussie, her sister, is 16. Marie calls herself the "hod-carrier and mortar mixer," though they use no hods. Mrs. Liebegut throws the bricks up to her, and she catches them, standing on a scaffold. That is a way they have in Germany, and the Liebegut family are proud to say that everything about this new house is to be German—as German as possible. Gussie lays most of the bricks. She can lay a thousand a day. They do the carpenter work, also—in fact, everything connected with the construction of the house. The plans for the house were drawn by the father, who is away at his regular business in the day time, while the women folk build merrily at the new home.

The first floor is a stable, in which they will keep two cows and a horse. Above will be five rooms, reached from the front by long steps leading up to a porch. The interior is not to be lathed and plastered. The smooth surface of the brick is good enough, the Liebeguts think. The father says the house will belong literally to the women, whose handiwork it will be.

WOMEN WORKING AS MASONS.

ARE GREAT WORKERS.

Americans Lead All Others in Amount of Labor Performed.

One reason for the supremacy of the United States in commerce and manufactures is the fact that, taken individually, American workmen do more work in a given time than those of any other nationality. Statistics recently made public show that, counting the work done by an American at 100, an Englishman will in the same time accomplish 86 per cent. of that amount. The best French, German and Belgian workers will average 77 per cent., while in many cases the percentage will run as low as 70. Workmen from Italy and other southern European countries rank still lower. Their best average is not more than 73 per cent. of the American's record. These figures are based on statistics of work done in removing earth and other material in preparation for the construction of railroads, in bricklaying, in stone dressing, and in coal mining.

AMOUNT OF WORK DONE BY MEN OF VARIOUS NATIONALITIES.

Giving Him His Medicine.

It is remembered of a Presbyterian divine prominent a generation ago that he was never at a loss for wit. At that time a certain question—we will call it that of the deceased wife's sister—was being periodically agitated at synods, and regularly settled according to ancient precedent. At a certain meeting a young, newly ordained minister, proud of his D. D., and inexperienced in the ways of the church, called for recognition and fearlessly introduced the much-debated matter.

He had no more than finished when the prominent divine arose and delivered himself as follows:

"Mr. Moderator, I smell a young doctor trying to resuscitate an old subject!"

The young D. D. nearly cried for mortification, and never touched on the question again.

Hares Never Drink.

Some naturalists believe that hares never drink, but get enough liquid for their needs in the dew on the grass they eat.

Taking a baby through its teething season is not near so hard on a woman as carrying a love affair through the summer, when there are so many pretty summer girls in town.

If a man dislikes ten persons, his reasons for disliking seven of the ten are so trivial that he would feel ashamed to see them in black and white.

We have noticed that the praise for a horse comes from those who have no intention of buying any.

The man who says something every time he speaks is not cut out for a society idol.

A man who has been treated to a coat of tar and feathers naturally feels stuck-up.

HOW TO STOP WORRYING.

"THE usual way people set about stopping worrying is a wrong one," writes Mary Boardman Page, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If a doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying the patient is likely to say impatiently: 'Oh, doctor, don't I wish I could! But I can't. If I could have stopped worrying a year ago I would not be ill now!'—all of which is probably perfectly true. And the doctor does not always know how to help him, because both doctor and patient have an idea that it is possible to repress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else.

"Let me illustrate this by a figure. Suppose you were to go into a completely darkened room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in buckets and carry it out at the door? Not at all. You would just open the windows and shutters and let in the blessed sunlight. You would replace the darkness with light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worry attitude of mind with the non-worry attitude. And this can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let nature have her own perfect way with him."

A pretty design to make over a dress, or to use when one is short of material, is shown in the picture. Make the skirt with a slight demi-train in three pieces, a straight front gore and a bias seam down the fitted back. The waist may have a bias seam at the back, as shown, the lines running up instead of down. The yoke, that is straight across behind and down to the waist line in front, is made of all-over embroidery or embroidered pique. The slope-out navy collar, with the ends extending down the sides of the front in two long "stoles," is made of navy blue dress canvas, matching the stripe in the skirt. A dress with the stripes running in this way will seem to add several inches to the height; but if any of them are made to run around it will take from the height and add to the plumpness.

A MADE-OVER DRESS.

Ways of Teaching Children.

The children who are not kept employed will get into mischief. If you do not find them an occupation they will find one for themselves, and it will, most likely, be one to which you will say: "Don't do that."

Find the children employment and so cultivate their tastes and help them to form good habits. Make it a rule that anything begun must be finished. Whatever is done should be done to the best of the little one's ability, and neatness and care should always be encouraged and praised.—New York Telegram.

Weds His Nurse.

James J. Stokes, a newspaper man, of Muncie, Ind., and Miss Ida Scott, formerly a nurse at the Cincinnati hospital, were married recently in the Covington Cathedral. During the epidemic of smallpox Stokes was vaccinated and was ill for several weeks in a pay ward of the hospital. It was there that he first met Miss Scott.

MISS SCOTT.

The Battle of Life.

There must always be some services that it will seem impossible to a woman to cease rendering. And here it is that the hardest battle of the head and heart really begins, says Harper's Bazar. Some of these services are dear because they give pleasure to the server, some because they give comfort to the served. It is not easy to turn from either. It is not easy, women are apt to think with some bitterness, to be a professional woman at all. And now again the head must be heeded. If you have honestly decided that as a duty to your talents, or to expediency, or to some other good motive, it is best for you to follow an outside profession, the way to begin is not with weak lamentations and comparisons of sex. One great reason for our thinking of man's path as so much easier in his professional career is because sacrifice to gain and end has become so a matter of course in the lives of men that we take their efforts as no sacrifice at all. It is not always as easy as it looks for a man to leave the bedside of a sick child, the hearth of an ailing wife, or even the happy sitting-room and the bright chatter of those he loves, to go to a work that sternly calls him.

Only Woman Prison Warden.

Mrs. Ellen Cheney Johnson, who died, not long ago, in London, was the only woman prison warden in the world. She had for fifteen years been warden of the women's prison at Sherborn, and had in that time worked a revolution in the system of caring for women prisoners. She was an American Elizabeth Fry, and it was largely through her persistent and unwearied efforts that a prison for women separate from that in which men were confined was established in Massachusetts.

MRS. JOHNSON.

During the war of the rebellion, Mrs. Johnson was a most active member of the United States Sanitary Commission, and she served with great ability on the finance and executive committee of the organization until the close of the war. She traveled all over the East, securing funds for the commission, and had at times raised as much as $50,000 for it. At the close of the war Mrs. Johnson, being a widow and childless, devoted herself entirely to charitable and philanthropic work. She became greatly interested prison reform work, and for five years was a member of the Board of Prison Commissioners. When she was appointed superintendent of the great prison for women at Sherborn she entered upon the work before her admirably equipped for it.

Home Diplomacy.

The following advice, given to a young married woman who was visited by an older and more experienced one, may be helpful to some of our readers:

When the visitor arose to go the hostess came to the door and out upon the pleasant piazza, which, however, looked a little dusty in the corners.

"Oh, dear!" said the young wife, "how provoking servants are. I told Mary to sweep the piazza thoroughly, and now look how dusty it is!"

"Grace," said the older woman, looking into the disturbed young face with kindly humorous eyes, "I am an old housekeeper. Let me give you a bit of advice. Never direct people's attention to defects. Unless you do so they will rarely see them.

"Now, if I had been in your place and noticed the dirt, I should have said: 'How blue the sky is,' or 'How beautiful the clouds are,' or 'How bracing the air is.' Then I should have looked up at that as I spoke and should have gotten you safely down the steps and out of sight without you seeing the dust."

A Saving that Is Loss.

Isn't it possible to have too much economy? If we scrimp and pinch every bit of sweetness out of life, what a heavy price we pay for economy! Often one may lose a friend, or catch a disastrous cold, or miss a train for some little miserable point of economy. People often laboriously save at an actual cost. A woman will press her way to a bargain counter at danger to life and limb and pickpockets, and go away radiant with a pair of 50-cent gloves which will last about three wearings. The same woman will go to an incompetent dressmaker and have her new gown ruined in the name of economy. "Economy is wealth," saveth the wise saw, but the poor make-believe economy which over-reaches itself defeats its own purpose and leads to nothing but the direst poverty of spirit and purse. Before rashly deciding on a point of economy it is fully worth while to sit down and figure out which is the more profitable, to leave the gas burning or waste matches.—Woman's Home Companion.

Schley's "Better Half."

Here is a portrait of Admiral Schley's "better half," made from a snapshot photograph taken by J. G. Hiestand, official photographer of the Manitou and Pike's Peak Railroad. The picture was secured while the lady was standing with her husband and a party of friends on the rear platform of the train at the summit of Pike's Peak, Colorado. Although the public has seen numerous pictures of the admiral, this is the first one of his wife which has been in print.

MRS. SCHLEY.

Embroidery Don'ts.

Don't use crude, staring colors. Soft tints are very much more artistic.

Don't draw your linen in working. Keep the work smoothly stretched in the hoops.

Don't fail to embroider evenly and neatly. Have the under side almost the same as the right side.

Don't fold embroidered pieces; roll them on a smooth, round stick and let them stay on it until needed.

Don't put your embroideries away soiled. This is apt to set any stains, making them harder to remove.

Rain and the Hose.

To flowers rain is the drink of drinks. You may deluge them with barrels from the hydrant and they will, at best, simply hold their own. Generally they wither in the long, dry seasons, and that without regard to the artificial wetting they may receive from the gardeners. But let a shower, however brief, fall upon them and they brighten visibly. The difference is that the rain brings down with it through the air a chemical quality that the vegetation needs. The rainwater may be like that in the lake as two volumes of water can be. But when it has ridden the upper levels of the atmosphere, when it has traveled through the various stages of vapor and liquid, and has tumbled down through the retort of the air, it has become charged with elements that no man can give it.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..SEPTEMBER 21, 1899.

Happily Wedded.

On Sunday, Sept. 17, 1899, at the beautiful farm residence of Mr. and Mrs, George Walker, one mile north of Waterloo, occurred the marriage of their only daughter, Miss Allie, to Mr. Chas. O. Speer, of Waterloo. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. E. Moorman, pastor of the U. B. church, in the presence of two families, and a few invited guests. Miss Walker is a very estimable young lady with many lovable qualities. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Speer, and a member of the firm of Speer & Co., and one of Waterloo's brightest young business men, and agent for the U. S. Express Co, in that place. These young people have hosts of friends and start out with bright prospects. The ceremony was performed at 1:30 p. m., Miss Maggie Bower presided at the piano. After this a bountiful dinner was served, and enjoyed by all present. A number of valuable presents were given to the bride and groom by the guests.

Fine Scenic Equipment.

"Under the Dome" by Lincoln J. Carter will be the offering at Henry's opera house Thursday evening. The action of the play takes the characters globe trotting as the scenes are laid at Washington, on the high seas, and to New York and the Samoan Islands. The scenic equipment is said to be on a big scale and to contain at least two extraordinary effects. These are a realistic ferry boat trip from Jersey City to New York and a soul stirring moving stage picture of the awful hurricane off Apia which proved so destructive to the German and American navies. In addition to these blood speeding effects the play is aided by some very pretty scenes. The mos effective of these is the capitol at Washington and a view of the beautiful coral reef harbor at Apia. The play is said to be well constructed and to contain some well worked up situations and some exceedingly funny lines.

Wawasee Marl Beds.

State Geologist Blatchley, has been at Wawasee lake for ten days, where he has been investigating the beds of marl. A fine deposit of about 100 acres in extent and of an average thickness of ten feet was found within a quarter of a mile of Wawasee, Ind. This bed has enough to supply a Portland cement factory for 100 years. Mr. Blatchley believes that there are many such deposits among the lakes of Northern Indiana, and recently a plant costing $250,000 was started for the manufacture of Portland cement. Much marl is being found in Michigan and many Portland cement factories are being started up.

Long Distance Costs.

(South Bend Times,)

A few days ago a man went into the Brooklyn office of the Bell Telephone Company, to talk with a friend in St. Louis. The conversation was exceedingly lenghty, and extended over several days. At any rate, when the bill was finally rendered, it had reached the enormous sum of $3,000. The rate to St. Louis from Brooklyn is $10 by day and $5 by night for five minutes' talk and $2 by day and $1 by night for each minute of additional time. The story demonstrates that this is an age of marvelous inventions, and that they must be paid for at remarkable rates.

Advices show a more peaceful turn of the South African troubles. Both sides begin to see what a serious matter it may prove.

Australia and other British colonies are enlisting volunteers on the American plan. to aid the British army in South Africa in case of war.

There is an anti-trust meeting of democratic governors at St. Louis today. The object is to take steps to fight trusts all over the country.

Reports from Japan say a severe wind storm known as a typhoon swept over the islands about two weeks ago, resulting in the loss of 3,000 lives and a vast amount of property.

One of our gunboats has chased a British merchant steamer away from Manila and clear to Hong Kong, but did not get her. She was evidently trying to land supplies for the Filipinos.

The most influential friend of Dreyfus, Senator Kestner, who for two years has given his time and strength to save Dreyfus, died yesterday morn- at about the hour Dreyfus was pardoned. It was a sad coincidence.

An anarchist-socialist in Paris had attempted to raise a riot, and start an insurrection. Not wishing to shed French blood, the police surrounded him and his men in his house, and have been starving them into a surrender. He held out for nearly two months, but this morning gave it.

Diaz, the president of Mexico has asked the Mexican Congress for a leave of twenty days to go to Chicago this fall to attend the great festival and laying the corner stone of the new postoffice. It seems this step is necessary in that country and some others, when the chief magistrate visits another country.

The Daily said Saturday, that the French cabinet would probably pardon Dreyfus when it met on Tuesday. Such proves true. Yesterday morning the members signed the papers that set him free. He was still confined at Rennes the city where the recent trial was held, but was probably liberated last evening. It is believed he will now retire to some quiet village where he can rest and if possible recover his broken health. While this turn of affairs has been expected, it does not it the least, relieve the French government from the odium of having convicted an innocent man of the most serious charge treason, when there was no proof against him. He was convicted both times apparently, for no other reason, than to shield the real culprit.

The Hendry Cases.

There was an interesting point in the case against Hendry at Angola. He was indicted for forgery on several counts, but they were all alike in substance. He sold wheat from his farm and took the usual receipt from the elevator man. These receipts show so many bushels, sold to such a man, and on the back are marked "No. 2 red" if of the best common grade, and "No. 3 red," if of the grade next lower. It is claimed that Hendry changed the numbers on the back of his receipts from 3 to 2, which would give him 8 cents a bushel more for his wheat. However, it appears he did not get any more, and the proof of wrong was wanting. So the indictments were quashed. But an appeal may be taken.

BUTLER.

A. G. Jones is putting up a substantial addition to his east North street residence.

Mrs. G. T. Johns of Duluth, and her sister from Detroit are visiting their father J. T. Champion.

Many of our people attended the Hicksville fair, and speak fairly of it. The attendance was fairly good.

The large brick residence owned by Henry Hovarter, near Helmer, had a close call from fire about a week ago. It occurred at dusk when the family were at home.

Isaac Stiefel is continuing his closing out sale preparatory to removing to the high altitude of Colorado. He has suffered considerably since his return and is very anxious to get back.

One of Newville's school houses has again became a target for the thunder bolt. In the last storm it suffered considerable damage by lightning. Insured in J. A. Campbell's agency.

Cosper Altenberg, wife and two daughters of Little Rock, Arkansas, are visiting with their friends here on their way home from Philadelphia. Mr. A seems to hold his own quite well.

The canning factory is running at high pressure now and turning out more goods than ever, in the same time. There is more than one hundred operatives busy almost day and night.

Quite a number of our people attended the funeral of Henry Wherley at Waterloo. He had lived here for a long time and was well known and highly respected by our people. His death in early manhood seems very sad indeed.

Our schools are running again with apparent smoothness. The number in attendance in very large, yet a few are trying to evade the law, and remain away from attending and receiving its benefits. The truant officer was here last week and some good may come of his visit.

A whaling schooner has been spoken on its way out of Hudson's Bay, that has been frozen fast in the ice for two years. It got loose about three weeks ago, and of course sailed for home, Bedford, Mass.

—Judge Allen Zollars of Fort Wayne was in town yesterday looking over the material for a good democratic county ticket next year. A better selection could not be made. He is in every way capable and a clean, honest man.

—The managers of the Kendallville fair always keep faith with their exhibitors by paying just what they offer. They maintain their credit with visitors and the public in general by giving them a better show than they advertise. 39.

—The newly married wife of machinist in Kokomo was off on a short visit to friends in Michigan and when she returned, found her husband had gone off on his wheel, leaving everything to her, and a note saying, "you are all right, but you can't cook." Here is a warning to Auburn wives and girls.

—Rev. C. S Johnson, pastor of the Methodist Protestant church at St. Joe, and Miss Violet Barney were married Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sol Barney, at that place. —An exchange says. "Don't try to cross the tracks in front of the fast trains. They are moving at the rate of a mile a minute. An ordinary horse takes fully a half minute in pulling a vehicle across the track, unless the animal is urged at the top of his speed. Even then a train a quarter of a mile distant from you approaching the crossing would be onto you, crushing your rig, and if not killing you, you will have a narrow escape."

—Day before yesterday as the west bound express on the new Wabash road, neared Montpelier it was found the sleeper was on fire. Efforts failed to put it out, and the passengers were hurried into another car, and on reaching Montpelier this car was set on a siding and burned to the ground. Luther Day, son of the ex-secretary of state, was hunting in the wilds of Ohio this week, and stepped into a quagmire, such as our own pioneers will remember. He sank at once, and could not get out. Some men came in answer to his cries, and worked a long time before he was got to hard ground. He had sunk to his shoulders.

—Capt. Lahnum had a little scrap today, that was over in a second or so. He had a check for the back pay of one of his former men, Will Leighty. Will's brother, Ed, somewhat the worse for drink, demanded that Capt. give it to him. Capt. Refused and Ed became abusive, followed the Captain about, till the latter got tired of it and turned and knocked Leighty down. Served him right.

—Great in every way this year—the Kendallville fair.

The Oceanic, the largest vessel in the world, has reached New York this week. The other big ocean steamers look small while near her. She made port exactly on her schedule time, six days, two hours and thirty-seven minutes being her time for the 3,000 odd miles. She brought 1,456 passengers, beside a full crew. She burned 400 tons of coal daily, and it took 183 firemen and engineers to do the work, the average speed being over 20 miles an hour. She was built at Belfast, Ireland, begun in 1897, launched Jan. 14, 1899, and cost five millions. Length 704 feet.

Mail advices at the war department from Manila state that the natives of the island of Samar are praying for the speedy arrival of the Americans, and will welcome the hoisting of the American flag. It is said that as a result of the forcible collection of taxes by the emissaries of the insurgents who take all they have, the natives are in a state of semi-starvation. They have no faith in the Tagalos, and they earnestly desire American protection. An insurgent leader, General Lucbau, has bolted to Japan, taking with him $2,000 collected by him for the insurgents. The agents of the insurgents endeavor to force the natives to join their forces, which they will not do. The condition in the island, it is asserted, is rapidly approaching riot and anarchy as the heavy and continued drag upon them in the form of tribute exasperates them, and, the latter says, threatens desperate resistance if it continues.

—The Hudson Banner says Hayward City will not be the only town in the vicinity of the big cement plant. Another liberal and enterprising land owner has laid out a new town and is selling lots at lower prices than those in the city. He is just [illegible] for some offense, and he now is telling of a plot he and some others have entered into, to kill the Sultan of Turkey. He says he is studying the manufacture and use of high explosives, and that he and his pals have their headquarters at Indianapolis. The man is probably an accomplished liar.

—Miles Payne, a celebrated outlaw and horse thief who inhabited these parts during the days of the regulators and before, and whose confession and evidence sent many of his associates to prison, finally fled the country and settled in Iowa. He changed his name and became a good citizen and was elected sheriff of his county. He married there, raised a family and became prosperous.

—Many soldiers have been made victims of a smooth swindle recently at Shelbyville. They were to subscribe for two books—the second one to be forwarded, to contain a personal sketch of their services during the rebellion. They signed the agreement and a small card was left with them which stated that they were to pay $4.50 for each volume, making $9 for two small books.

ST. JOE.

Wm. Leighty was at the Hub Saturday.

Miss Addie Easterday returned to Garrett Sunday.

Charley Johnson returned to Ann Arbor Saturday night.

Aaron Thomas purchased a fine piece of furniture at Hicksville one day last week.

John Keeler has moved to Ashland, Ohio, where he and his wife will take care of an invalid brother.

Mrs. F. J. Body was at Hicksville Thursday of last week where she purchased some fine furniture.

Pension agent, J. D. Leighty, was at home for two or three days last week. He returned to Indianapolis Friday.

Some of the soldier boys were made happy last week by receiving their back pay for extra clothing during the Spanish unpleasantness.

A. B. Filley and M. F. Body have been improving the looks of their homes by having the street in front of their residences treated to a fresh coat of gravel.

Clarence Woodcox attended institute at Newville last Saturday. His duties as one of the teachers in the town of Newville commenced last Monday. He drives to and from school every day.

It is reported that one of our citizens who occasionally gets so-so, was treated to a knock-out at Auburn one day last week and that Captain Lahnum performed the duty. Treat 'em all so, Captain, and you will have our thanks.

Your correspondent had a talk with Mr. Wm. Kenton of the B. & O. railroad last Saturday and if we can judge from what he says there is a likelyhood that the pumping station and tank may be moved to Concord in the near future. Comments are unnecessary.

The St. Joe News says we have it in for the school board. Not at all, Mr. News; we only called attention to a few facts which the News failed to catch. Please be as prompt to see defects. Now as formerly when weeds and grass grow around and on the school ground called forth groans and comments.

The Uncle Tom's Cabin show last week according to accounts told us must have been just a little rocky and those of our citizens who strain at a gnat in their endeavor to swallow a camel, must have had their modesty badly shocked by language that would shock the finer feelings of one quite rude. But then it was a show and must have the patronage of the public.

Another Klondiker Home.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER.

ANGOLA, IND., Sept. 16, 1899.—Once again the streets of Angola enlivened by a jubilant throng of people over the return last evening of Edward Freygang, the third one of the quartet of Angola boys who bore the ice fields of the Klondike. Mr. Freygang being a member of the Angola band and fire department, was met at the train by those two organizations, and escorted up town in the same manner that was Ott Welch, who arrived Tuesday evening. Several hundred of our citizens turned out to see Ed and give him a welcome home. Of course Mr. Freygang, like the others, did not have many bags of gold dust, but he has grown a fine mustache—a regular Klondike "bang." One characteristic of the boys' return is, they are all fat and hearty, but not ragged nor saucy.

OBITUARY.

Henry William Wherley was born in DeKalb county, Indiana, April 6, 1867, and died September 14, 1899, at 8 o'clock a. m., aged 32 years, 5 months and 8 days.

He leaves to mourn his loss a mother, five brothers and three sisters, his father, Rudolph Wherley, having preceded him to the spirit land December, 1884, a brother, in 1858 and a sister in 1865.

OBITUARY.

Ruth Helen, little daughter of Chas. and Jessie Bateman, was born July 5, 1896, in Auburn, Ind., and departed this life after a few days of sickness at the tender age of three years, two months and eleven days. Little Ruth was a bright and lovely child, captivating the affections of all who knew her by her winning ways. When her life seemed brightest and happiest, death came and blew out the light. Death has removed Ruth from all the uncertainty, sickness, pain, sorrow and change that belong even to the brightest and happiest life on earth. She is now a full sharer in the glorified bliss of heaven. She dwells where Jesus is, and in full possession of eternal life. Then weep not as those who have no hope, but lift your hearts to God in trustful submission, and wait before him. Little Ruth was a member of the cheerful face will be missed. She leaves to mourn her death a father, mother, twin brothers, four grandparents, two great grandparents, besides many other friends The funeral service was conducted from the house on Monday, Sept. 18, at 10 a. m. It Was Real Fire.

A lot of boys in the outskirts of Chicago were playing "Buffalo Bill" one day last week. They divided into two sets; one lot were Indians and the rest were Buffalo Bill's scouts. It was arranged that one of the scouts should be captured, tied to a stake and burned, but that his friends were to rush in, kick away the fire and rescue him. But the wind happened to be high and the stuff they fired was dry and blazed rapidly, while the rescuers were a little slow. The lad at the stake yelled as the flames ran up his legs, but he could not get away, and by the time the rescuers had come from around the place of concealment and kicked away the fire he was about done for. The doctors hope to pull him through, though he is seriously burned.

Pythians in Social Session.

A few days ago Frank E. Rose, who has long held a responsible and lucrative position in the B. & O. dispatcher's office at Garrett, accepted a place with the Rock Island road at DesMoines, Iowa, and when it became known that Mr. Rose and wife were to leave Auburn the Knights of Pythias arranged to give them a fitting farewell reception. The program thus hastily arranged was carried out last evening.

The announcement of the meeting drew a goodly number of the Knights together, with the Rathbone Sisters who were their guests on this occasion. The Pythian castle hall was the scene of the social session, where the knights and ladies enjoyed themselves until about 11 o'clock with games and a general good time, during which Mr. Rose was made the recipient of a handsome present in the shape of a fine gold chain and K. P. charm. At the hour named the party repaired to Baxter's restaurant where they sat down to a feast of good things prepared in the best style. Here the most brilliant speakers of the order were called upon for remarks and each one of them in turn was fined for "talking before company." A pleasant feature of the banquet was the presentation to Mrs. Rose of a fine gold ring from the Rathbone Sisters. The party broke up at a late hour after extending best wishes to the guests of honor and regrets that they were to leave Auburn, which has been to them a pleasant home since childhood. Mr. Rose has for some time filled the office of deputy grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias for this district, and himself and Mrs. Rose have many friends who will regret their departure.

Helms May Go Free.

The Fort Wayne Journal speaking of this case as it stood last evening says:

There is a probability that Jacob Helms, the alleged Garrett rapist, may not be tried on the serious charge that was placed against him some time ago. This case was venued to this county from DeKalb county, where the alleged crime was supposed to have been committed. The case has been set for trial here for today and tomorrow. The local authorities have been writing to the authorities of DeKalb county regarding this case, but have received no definite communication. Prosecutor Doughman is not supposed to secure the evidence in the case, and he knows nothing of the witnesses to be used. Judge O'Rourke is not pleased with the way the DeKalb county authorities have treated Allen county people in the matter, and he stated yesterday that in case the prosecutor from Auburn was not here with his witnesses today ready to go to trial or did not offer some good excuse for continuance, he would dismiss the case. A jury has been secured for this trial, as it was expected that it would be bitterly fought, but the way things looked last night there would not be much sensation about the matter.

D. D. Moody returned from Fort Wayne today and informs us that the trial of the case has been postponed until October 16.

HAIR PLANTING.

Successful Experiments of a Turkish Physician.

parts of the scalp. His results seem to show that there is no impossibility in the complete renewal of a lost head of hair by this means. The physician, Dr. Menahem Hodara, according to a foreign paper, tried his experiments in the case of a disease that had removed part of his patient's hair. His plan was to scarify the bare surface and to implant thereon hairs removed from other parts of the patient's head. The hairs used for the purpose were trimmed with scissors at each end. Some four weeks after implantation a certain number of the hairs were found to have taken root, and in no long time a goodly new crop was produced. Encouraged by these results, Dr. Hodara has since applied the method in other cases of baldness following favus, and he thinks himself justified in stating that "clinically there can be no doubt as to this very curious fact—that small bundles of hair stems cut with scissors and implanted in the incisions made with the scarifier can take root and grow, forming in time long and visible hairs." By microscopic examination he has satisfied himself that after some weeks a real new bulb forms at the lower end of the implanted hair. Dr. Hodara's results are interesting in themselves, and still more in the promise which they appear to offer of further results, undreamed of, or at any rate unmentioned, by the ingenious experimenter. Why, asks the New York Herald, should not the same treatment be applied in cases of ordinary baldness? Many bald men would gladly submit to have their scalps plowed and afterward sown with new hairs if there was a reasonable hope of even a moderate harvest.

The Hottest Region.

The hottest region on earth is in the southeastern part of Persia, where it borders the gulf. For forty consecutive days in July and August the temperature has been known not to fall lower than 100 degrees, day or night.

ANOTHER DESIGN

To Complete the Historical Frieze Around the Capitol's Rotunda.

Washington Special New York Mail and Express: It has been the ambition of every administration to complete the historical frieze around the big rotunda under the great dome of the capitol. This fresco illustrates the history of the United States from the landing of Columbus. It has been completed, except one panel or space, and as each administration has come and gone, designs have been submitted to fill that space with some event that occurred during that particular administration. The latest suggestion was made during Mr. Cleveland's last term, when it was proposed to fill the vacant space with the scene of the opening of the World's Fair at Chicago. This picture was to represent Mr. Cleveland touching the electric button and starting the machinery of the Columbian exposition. Designs were drawn and submitted, but the project did not quite please the congressional committee which has charge of the capitol. Within the last few weeks a New York artist has come forward with another design to complete the historical frieze, and this time the subject is the freedom of Cuba. The artist has treated the subject in an allegorical way, representing President McKinley as striking the shackles off the arms of a female, supposed to represent Cuba. Some have proposed that the artist change his design, and, instead, add other figures, representing Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, as well as Cuba. No doubt, when congress meets the design will be submitted to the congressional committee.

PREJUDICE MADE PROFITABLE.

Superstition Against the Opal Was Merely a Jeweler's Fiction.

It is only within a few years that the fashionable women of Chicago could be induced to wear opals, although they are among the rarest and most beautiful of gems. But now the opal, long tabooed because of its supposed unlucky qualities, is reported by dealers in gems to be once more selling well. With this information comes what purports to be the true story of how so beautiful a stone came by its bad name.

It seems, according to the story, that a Belgian jeweler, finding a great demand for opals in Brussels, sent one of his salesmen to London to purchase a supply. On arriving there this emissary found to his chagrin that the object of his quest was the most popular gem in the English capital, and that its price was proportionately large. Forthwith he conceived the story that opals bring bad luck. He circulated this story diligently, with the surprising result that the much sought stones came to be sedulously avoided, and that their price rapidly declined. In the course of two months opals were selling in London for one-third of the price previously asked for them, and the astute Belgian promptly bought up all there were offered for sale; in fact, all the opals that were to be had. Before the superstition he had started had time to reach the continent of Europe, he had delivered the jewels to his chief, and the firm had placed them upon the market and reaped a mammoth profit on the transaction.

The belief in the ill-starred fortune of an opal's owner grew greatly and brought fruit a hundredfold. For twenty-five years past the stone has been almost unsalable, in spite of its beauty. Now someone has unearthed, or more probably invented the story of the Belgian speculator, and the pendulum of popular sentiment has begun to swing in the opposite direction.

One of the oldest bridges in Europe is soon to disappear, under the demand for better navigation of the river it spans. This is the stone bridge, with fifteen arches and a total length of 994 feet, built across the Danube at Regensburg (Ratisbon), in Bavaria, by Duke Henry the Superb, in 1135-'46. The piers rest on piles, protected by stone riprap and heavy ice-breakers; the roadway is very narrow, and the footway allow the passage of only one person at a time. So far as its stability is concerned it would probably stand for another 750 years, but it interferes with the passage of steamboats.

Women Wage Earners.

From New York Press: There are said to be 4,000,000 women wage earners in this country; 250,000 are teachers, besides 35,000 music teachers. There are 10,000 artists, 2,725 authors, 1,145 clergymen, 888 newspaper women, 279 detectives, 208 lawyers and 40 chemists. Two Cincinnati women make $15,000 a year out of a restaurant, and the woman manager of a California insurance company receives a salary of $10,000.

Emperor Seldom Seen.

The Emperor of Austria is the only member of the Austrian imperial family who is never seen walking in the streets of the cities and large towns. When he was a young man, and but few people knew the features of the monarch, he thought it a treat to elbow his way through crowds, but now he always avoids even the smallest assembly of persons.

To Make the Deaf Hear.

At the Dawson Street Congregational church, Ballarat, special accommodation is provided for deaf worshipers, a diaphragm having been rigged up in the vicinity of the pulpit, from which the sound of the clergyman's voice is carried in tubes to the ears of such of his flock as may be afflicted with a hardness of hearing. — Melbourne Leader.

NATURAL WOODS IN BUGGIES.

They May Largely Supplant the Old Style Painted Vehicle.

The conventional black-painted buggy will have sharp competition next season by the revival of the demand for natural woods. Already many of the buggy manufacturers have laid in large stocks of fine woods and are making them up in a large number of light pleasure vehicles for single horses. Many samples are shown in windows around the city, and the boulevards give promise of having light-colored rigs galore for next year. The woods are highly polished and in beauty will compare with the handsomest pianos. Birch, bird's-eye maple and oak will be the woods most generally used, because, while they finish beautifully, they are the cheapest. The oak will be stained in some instances, giving it the rich gold and darker shades. Mahogany and beech are the kinds selected by those who prefer the deep rich red shades. Mahogany also gives considerable variation in color, that portion near the heart being darker than the part close to the bark of the tree. Careful matching of the shades produces a charming effect. Ash and poplar augment the yellow shades. Hard maple has a good even dark color, and walnut ranges from dark to light. One order has been placed for red cedar, and it is said to be coming out of the preparatory courses a remarkably handsome production. "By far the handsomest wood that can be used, in my opinion," said an experienced Wabash avenue buggy-maker yesterday, "is the sycamore, and there will be a number of buggies made of it. I made one in Wisconsin years ago, and I believe it was the prettiest piece of wood I ever saw, and the coloring and shading is most brilliant. It is of light red color, and a good piece, well finished, gives the idea of flames, or sometimes like the sunshine on dancing water. Such a piece of wood, passing rapidly before the eyes in a good bright light, will make any one admire it, while the more sentimental will be in raptures. Cypress is much like the sycamore, flamy and reddish, but not quite so brilliant. Rosewood and Circassian and French walnuts are magnificent and will be used in many. In these buggies the dash as well as the body will be of the finest piece that we can get, and we expect to have the most beautiful buggies in Chicago next year that can be found anywhere. There is no reason why the buggy should always be black—no more than there is reason a person should always wear black clothes, and a natural wood buggy, in addition to its fine appearance, is cheaper to keep and requires little work to keep it clean. Even when dirty it is presentable."—Chicago Chronicle.

PEARLS A DISEASE.

A Sign, Say the Scientists, That the Oyster Is Unhealthy.

Some hold that fine pearls are the result of a disease in the oyster, and others that they are caused by the shellfish coating intrusive bodies, such as grains of sand, insects, and even small fishes, with nacre, so as to make them agreeable to its soft flesh. According to a paper of M. Leon Diguet, presented to the Academie des Sciences, Paris, recently, there is a distinction between fine pearls and intrusive bodies coated with nacre, which renders both views more or less right. It is true that foreign bodies entering the shell and probably irritating the mollusc are coated with nacre, and sold as pearls, often of peculiar and fanciful shape. They occur between the "mantle" and the shell, but are usually, if not always, attached to the shell them, have not the iridescence of the true "Orient" pearl, but only that of the shell or mother-of-pearl. They are the result of an accidental intrusion. On the other hand, the true spherical pearl of Orient luster is formed in any part of the shellfish except the mantle and has no connection with the shell itself. It is a pathological classification of "stone," and seems to arise from parasites. It begins in a small sac of humor which becomes gelatinous and classifies in a series of concentric layers. A pearl thus formed is composed of crystalline matter and a substance resembling conchioline in alternate layers. At its heart is a cavity holding organic matter and calcareous crystals, with remains of organized creatures, presumably the parasites which have provoked the malady in the shellfish. In course of time the sac in which the pearl is made becomes thin, and the mollusc, breaking it easily, can eject the pearl.

Learned by Accident.

Queen Victoria learned in a curious way that she was to be Queen of England. Six years before her accession—when she was 12—her mother inserted in her history book a genealogical table tracing the descent of the rulers of that country from the time of William I., and on reading through this she saw her own name placed next as the occupant of the throne.

Broke Her Contract.

From Puck: Mrs. Slimdiet (the landlady)—Mr. Upton, you must either pay up or leave! I have kept my contract with you, and you must keep your contract with me! Hardy Upton—But you haven't kept your contract with me! You guaranteed to make me comfortable! Mrs. Slimdiet—Well, haven't I made you comfortable? Hardy Upton—No! Your constant naggin me to settle my board bills for the last three months has made my life in this house exceedingly uncomfortable!

WONDERFUL GEYSER AT WORK

California Spouter That Throws Water 600 Feet in the Air.

From the Scientific American: The people of southern California have recently been favored with one of the most extraordinary exhibitions of natural phenomena on record—one which has even astonished beyond measurement all classes of a community familiar already with instances of what nature can accomplish when it sets out to do something out of the common. Southern Californians are so used to shocks of earthquakes, incipient volcanoes, or threatened tidal waves that it takes something extremely eruptive to disturb their ordinary composure, but the successful effort of a rural rancher in his search for water with which to irrigate his fields, parched with a long drouth, has turned the gaze of the whole state toward the little town of Whittier, a hamlet located in the neighborhood of Los Angeles. Some weeks ago a farmer named Myers, living at Santa Fe Springs, began sinking an artesian well. Others in the neighborhood had successfully tapped a subterranean flow at depths of from 300 to 400 feet, and Mr. Myers hoped for a successful issue to his enterprise. By slow stages the drills descended until a depth of 500 feet was attained. This was on Sunday, May 14. A drill weighing 200 pounds was employed and the prospect of tapping a good flow of water was becoming more and more encouraging. A ten-inch pipe had been sunk some distance, and the usual preparations made for controlling the flow when it did make its expected appearance. The heavy drill was working with its usual monotonous regularity, when, after one deep plunge, a loud roaring sound was heard coming from the well, accompanied by jets of muddy water and outbursts of heavy stones. Soon after the drill itself made its appearance, followed by a grand column of water, which forced itself higher and higher until the top reached an elevation of 500 feet. The flow was accompanied by vast quantities of gas smelling of sulphur strongly and igniting when fire was applied, burning with a strong blue flame. Oil in considerable quantities was mixed with the flow. The stones were thrown to an equal height with the water and the exhibition of tremendous force was appalling to the last degree. No geyser of the Yellowstone ever displayed such activity. The column of muddy water was like a great pillar, extending almost to the clouds and falling back to earth again in graceful festoons. The force exerted was equal to a thousand powerful engines. For two weeks this phenomenon has been active, though some diminution of the force exerted is beginning to be apparent. The flow of water is enormous, and, the country being flat, some difficulty is apprehended in its control.

THE IMPORTATION OF MONKEYS

Organ-Grinders Do Not Carry Them Here Nowadays.

A man who had missed the monkeys formerly carried about by organ-grinders in the city streets, and who had attributed their disappearance to the changed conditions of the organ-grinding business, to the substitution of the big piano-organ on wheels, managed by two persons, for the old-fashioned smaller hand-organ, that was carried about by the player, found upon inquiry that, whatever influence the changed conditions might have had, the carrying of monkeys by organ-grinders is now prohibited here by a city ordinance. There are, however, places in which the monkey still forms a valuable part of the organ-grinder's outfit, and where the nimble it does for the pennies, still climbs fences and rainwater conductors, and hops up on porches quite in the old familiar way, in search of contributions. While monkeys are not permitted here, there are men who buy monkeys and train them to sell to organ-grinders who can use them elsewhere; and a well-trained monkey sometimes brings as much as $50. It had seemed, with fewer monkeys in sight, as though there must be fewer monkeys now imported, but the fact appears to be that, if anything, the importation is just now rather greater than usual, due to the increased demand from the show people, who are, after all, the greatest purchasers of monkeys in this country. The organ-grinders use a considerable number; a few, comparatively, are sold for zoological collections, and in recent years a few have been sold for pets; but the largest buyers of monkeys are the traveling shows, of which there are, besides the great, modern, consolidated shows, many smaller ones, showing in smaller towns throughout the country. Take them all together, and these shows use up a good many monkeys. The life of a monkey on the road is usually but a single season. The show renews its stock of monkeys every year.

Drawing Power of a Horse.

A horse can draw on the worst kind of earth about four times as much as he can carry on his back. On a good macadamized road he can pull ten times as much; on a wooden road twenty-five times as much, and on a street railway fifty-eight times as much.

Among the Malayalis.

The Malayalis, a caste of Madras, have a most curious custom. A man having very young sons takes to himself new wives, which he calls his sons' wives, the children of the marriage being called the sons' children. This particular relation continues from one generation to another.

ROMAN RUINS IN ENGLAND.

Excavations Have Brought to Light a Ruined City.

Through systematic excavation extending over many years the 100 acres inclosed within the walls of the ancient Romano-British city of Silchester have yielded a large crop of objects of great antiquarian value, which form quite an imposing collection in the Reading museum. The division of the areas for exploration each year takes the lines of the ancient streets, as indicated by the difference in the color of the crops which are cultivated on the spot, and already a little over half the site has been dug out, relieved of its treasures and restored to cultivation after the foundations of the ancient buildings have been carefully planned and photographed. The results of last year's explorations are now on exhibition for a few days in the apartments of the Society of Antiquarians at Burlington house. The evidence they afford confirms the view already accepted that the site was occupied by a civil population and not by military. In addition to minor buildings a large, well-planned house of early date, several fine hypocausts and a workshop have been unearthed, as well as a number of wells and pits, one of the latter having a double row of wooden stakes driven into the bottom, probably for the impaling of wild animals. The remains of an earlier house were found beneath the large one, with a rare mosaic pavement sufficiently intact to permit of huge slabs being placed together and placed on exhibition. It was contrary to ancient government that human bones should be interred within the walls of a city, but evidently the modern evader of by-laws and regulations had his prototype in remote days, since in a secret, out-of-the-way corner, some feet below the surface, has been found a jar full of calcined human bones. For the $2,500 already spent upon them the excavations have given ample results, and it is hoped that the $15,550 still required by the exploration fund will be forthcoming in order that the work may be satisfactorily completed.—London Telegraph.

INTERESTING PARIS BEGGARS.

"Father Christmas" Has Curious History—Formerly Rich.

Two interesting beggars were arrested the other day in the streets of Paris, says the London Post. One of them, "Father Christmas" (Pere Noel), is a well-known character of the Halles quarter. Pere Noel is 80 years of age, and owes his name to the possession of a flowing white beard reaching to his waist. He was much incensed when accused of being a vagabond, and in language more academic than the commissary of police himself was capable of using he pointed out that the policemen has committed an "abuse of authority." He produced twopence halfpenny, and referred the magistrate to a circular of M. Atthalin, laying down that when a person possesses a sum of money for which he can obtain shelter and food he is not a vagabond. "Father Christmas" scouted the idea that he was a beggar. He gave, he said, lessons in history to workmen in cheap restaurants in exchange for his meals. "Father Christmas" has a curious history himself. He was a justice of the peace in Paris, and he holds university degrees for literature and science. He was formerly very rich, but spent his fortune in leading a fashionable and fast life. After he was ruined he inherited another fortune of £20,000, which lasted him just ten months. "Father Christmas"—Charles Bataille by his proper name—has been sent to the dépôt at Rue de Dunkerque. At the police station it turned out that she was born on Feb. 23, 1799. Her first husband died in 1837, her second was killed in 1848. For over twenty years she has been unable to do anything, and has existed on charity. "I live at 5 Rue de Chartres," said the old woman, "but you can send me to prison. It is quite indifferent to me where I pass the time I have still to live." The commissary of police sent Mme. Harwell home and promised to see what could be done for her.

Dickens Reported for It.

London Correspondence Chicago Inter Ocean: The merging of the Suffolk Chronicle into the Suffolk Times and Mercury serves to recall an interesting incident in the life of Charles Dickens. It was the Suffolk Chronicle which sixty years ago brought Dickens to Ipswich for the purpose of assisting in reporting a county election. But for this fact we should probably never have had Pickwick's nocturnal adventures at the Great White Horse, or have heard of the Eatenswill Gazette and the Eatenswill Independent.

Puffs of Tobacco Smoke.

Science has calculated that an average puff of cigar smoke sets free over 2,000,000,000 tiny particles, a whiff from a pipe liberates over 1,800,000,000 of these particles, and one from a cigarette starts 2,900,000,000 of them flying through the surrounding atmosphere.

Making Ducks Lay Black Eggs.

According to a writer in a French scientific paper, ducks fed on acorns, which they will eat ravenously, not unfrequently lay black eggs. The reason is that their eggshell is naturally rich in iron, and this combines with the tannin in the acorn to produce a good fast black. The same paper states that if fowls are fed on boiled lobster shells they will lay bright red eggs.

END OF THE WORLD.

Scientist Figures That It Is Three Billion Years Old.

Scientists do queer things sometimes. One of them has attempted to calculate in cold mathematics how soon we may expect the judgment day, and he has prepared a paper on the subject which he expects to read before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, says the New York Herald. Starting with the total amount of energy stored in the sun and the fact that the orb of day is continuously distributing energy equivalent to the work of seven men for each area of the earth's surface of the size of the human body, our statistician calculates that it will require 3,375,000,000 years of outpouring before a sensible diminution of the quantity of energy given out can be detected. Up to this distant period mountains will stand, rivers will run, plants will grow, and animal life will exist very much as it does today. If you realize that solar energy, as soon as used, reasserts itself in some other form, either as sound, electricity or simple motion, it is easy to see that this estimate is too small rather than too great. At any rate, the world is not liable to stop going for a few years yet, according to his reasoning. Some idea of the vastness of the force that is meted out to us from the physical source of earthly life may be gained, he says, by considering that if the energy that the sun gives to the earth in a single day could be bottled up and directed against Niagara Falls it would cause that great body of water to dash back again up hill for 4,000 years. If turned into a single blast of heat it would cause every living creature to instantaneously blight and wither; the ice around the poles would be melted in one and three-quarter minutes, and in another eleven seconds all the oceans would be turned into steam. If transmitted into electricity a spark would flash from the earth as far as the planet Jupiter. If collected into a single sound the vibration thereof would not only break every eardrum in the world, but would uproot the giant trees of the forest and even level mountains. If changed into a momentary flash of light its burst would be so blinding as to penetrate the walls of the deepest dungeons and destroy the sight of every living creature. In brilliancy this flash would exceed the brightness of the sun itself over a million times. For one man to expend an amount of energy equivalent to that which the earth receives from the sun in the tenth part of a second he would have to work hard continuously for 87,000,000 years. This calculation is remarkable in that its result differs by more than 3,374,000,000 years from the period when scientists generally believe that the world will come to an end. Such experts as Darwin and Huxley believed that it could not sustain life two million years hence.

CORK SINKS IN THIS FLUID.

Will Not Sustain Lightest Material on Its Surface.

Now that hydrogen has been liquefied, there seem to be no more worlds to conquer in this direction. It was a remarkable coincidence that the first public exhibition of this latest wonder was made in connection with the centenary of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. Professor Dewar, in opening the exhibition, spoke of liquid hydrogen as a new instrument of research, which it eminently is by virtue of the extremely low temperature at which alone it can exist, and which low temperature it, by its presence or contact, enables other substances approximately to reach. The liquid was exhibited in a state of gentle ebullition [illegible] cess of heat. The hydrogen is a transparent liquid, and besides being the coldest is also the lightest liquid known. A cork drops immediately to the bottom of it. At the bottom of the vessel containing the liquid there appeared a wh[illegible] substance, which was, in fact, solid air, or air ice. It is impossible to avoid the air ice at the bottom of the vessel, as the air at the surface is, by the intense cold, condensed, liquefied, and subsequently solidified, and, being so much heavier than the hydrogen, it sinks and accumulates at the bottom. To show that the liquid was really hydrogen, a light was applied to a small quantity, which at once burst into brilliant flame. Solids immersed in the liquid long enough to attain the same temperature were, upon being taken out, covered with liquid air, which would run down and drop off.—American Machinist.

Cigarettes.

Taking the population of Great Britain and Ireland at 38,000,000, a trade journal assumes that 10 per cent, are cigarette smokers, and that they consume on an average five a day all the year round. This would give a total of nearly 7,000,000,000. The tobacco contained in this number of cigarettes would weigh over 9,300 tons, and if it were stowed in carts, each carrying a ton, and the carts marshaled in a line with twenty feet for each horse and vehicle, a procession would be formed over thirty-five miles long, the total length of 7,000,000,000 of them would be upward of 231,000 miles, or more than enough to circle the globe nearly fourteen times. It would make a line from here to the moon, and nearly half the way back again.

New Dog in England.

In England there has appeared a new kind of dog, which is too high-bred and too rare to become common. It is called the "butterfly" or "papillon," and weighs less than three pounds.

Three doctors, Ross, Cooper and Pritchard prescribed calomel and quinine for the disease caused by miasm which attacked impartially the physicians themselves.

The chances for war in South Africa, seem greater each day. It is difficult to see how either the British or the Boers can back down. Both sides are actively arming. The British dependant provinces in South Africa may unite with the Boers in the Transvaal, in which case, England would have her hands full.

—The men digging the trench on Cedar street east of the court house cut through the old brick sewer today, that was originally made from the court house. It runs across east and emptied at the time on the low ground between the opera house and Trout's barn. It looks shallow now and has long since been forgotten. It is full of dirt.

—Some of our readers have complained about not having reading matter enough when we have big ads. They will notice, however that the amount of reading we give does not vary at such times as much as one would suppose. We give the same number of columns of reading matter each day, and when we have a big ad. we make room for it without injury to anyone, and especially readers.

At the anti-trust conference at Chicago last week, there were many able speeches. But only one man had a definite plan to propose. This was Bryan who in his speech laid down this plan. 1. No corporation should be allowed to take out a charter in one state, and then do business in any other state. (This referred to the fact that many of the trusts take out a charter under the laws of New Jersey, for that state will charter anything, in order to get the fees that are paid in.) 2. Such corporation if it does do business outside of the state that issues its charter, must receive a license from Congress or by its authority, and such a license as will prevent the watering of stock, will prevent a monopoly of business, and will compel the corporation to make public its condition, its capital, etc. This looks reasonable, and perhaps from this outline of his plan, something may yet be brought out that will solve this difficult problem. The earnest speeches by men of all parties and creeds, at last weeks meeting show how deeply the public are concerned in heading off the trusts by some means.

Curious Thimbles.

Some curio-hunters are very fond of collecting thimbles. First in point of interest comes the old fashioned ivory "finger hat," used at the beginning of the century, and now rare. It was rather costly, and its carving made it thick and heavy, which reason, no doubt, soon caused it to go out of fashion. The gold thimbles used about fifty years ago are also much valued, and jeweled thimbles are fetching almost any price. These, it seems, are likely to come into considerable vogue, especially as souvenirs. The stones in these are seldom really precious, for they cannot be sufficiently embedded in the gold; but amber, turquoise and the cuttings from fine stones, as well as tiny pearls, are all used for their adornment.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

TEN YEARS IN PRISON.

THIS IS THE SENTENCE IMPOSED UPON DREYFUS.

Captain Is Confident of Release Despite the Judgment—New Degradation of Condemned Man Is Not Possible—World to Boycott Paris Fair.

All France is perplexed over the effect of the verdict in the Dreyfus court martial, which sentences the unfortunate officer to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress. Even the men most familiar with the nation's law differ in opinion as to whether or not the condemned man will have to suffer the ten years' detention imposed by the judges. Dreyfus himself holds that the five years' solitary imprisonment will offset the new sentence and many prominent lawyers hold the same view.

Attorney Demange of counsel for the defense, Col. Jouaust, president of the court martial, and Clerk Coupois of the military tribunal declare that the imprisonment on Devil's Island will count for nothing and that the new term must be served by the captain. The theory that the sentence was fixed at ten years by the judges, that the punishment would exactly equal that already undergone, seems baseless. It was shown that the vote of the court martial—5 to 2—made such verdict obligatory and the question of the accused man's early release was not considered by the tribunal.

A second degradation will not be possible, as Dreyfus' sword was not returned to him and he has no epaulets on the undress uniform which he now wears. Formal application for revision will be made as soon as the necessary papers can be prepared.

Dreyfus bore the terrible shock with marvelous fortitude, one might almost say with unnatural calm. He seemed stupefied when Attorney Labori communicated to him the verdict, but he afterward rallied.

Mme. Dreyfus and Mathieu Dreyfus, his brother, visited the prisoner during the course of the afternoon, his brother subsequently leaving for Paris. The application to the court of revision was taken to him by M. Labori's assistant and he signed it. Sunday he spoke but little, although he seemed in better spirits than might have been anticipated. The meeting with his wife was naturally very affecting, but both held up as well as possible. He said to her:

"I am not uneasy regarding myself, as I shall soon be free, but I think of you and my poor children. They will be branded as the children of a traitor."

Dreyfus is convinced that the ten years' imprisonment to which he is sentenced will be wiped out by the five years of solitary seclusion he underwent on Devil's Island, and he expects to be released by Oct. 15, which will be five years from the date of his former condemnation.

TO BOYCOTT PARIS EXPOSITION

Reports from All Parts of Civilization Would Indicate This Result.

Reports from all parts of the world indicate a general boycotting of the Paris exposition because of the verdict in the Dreyfus case. Germany will doubtless lead in this effective condemnation of the nation which bears the Dreyfus scandal.

Although the various governments have already been allotted space for exhibits and their buildings are under way, it is probable that many of the powers will decide to abandon their plans for the big fair. Where it will be impossible for the governments to cancel arrangements individual exhibitors will refuse to participate and they predict utter failure for what was to have been the crowning event of the century.

The London press is open in denouncing the judgment of the Rennes court. Leading papers of Russia, Germany, Austria, Italy, Hungary and other nations unite in advocating a boycott of the exposition. In the United States, from which France expected to draw thousands of visitors, a similar movement is said to be on foot.

From many New York pulpits Sunday the verdict of the Dreyfus court martial was denounced in unmeasured terms. Everywhere in the city, where the result of the court martial was discussed, the judges who rendered the verdict of guilty were severely criticised. In Chicago this feeling has been noticed everywhere. From gray-bearded men of business to the newsboys there is now a feeling of repulsion for all that appertains to France. In his pulpit at the First Baptist Church the Rev. P. S. Henson declared Dreyfus a martyr and said the decision was a disgrace in the eyes of justice.

Among the reports from Berlin that of the Cologne Gazette is very significant. The Gazette says: "This verdict stamps France as belonging to the barbaric middle ages. A wall has been established between France and the remainder of the civilized world."

FEAR THE YANKEES.

South American Republics Are in Dread of Being Absorbed.

Private advices received in City of Mexico from Brazil show that the Government there has been greatly influenced by the accounts regarding an alleged secret understanding between the Bolivian and the United States governments by which the latter power was to take over the territory on the upper Amazon claimed by Bolivia, a region rich in rubber. It is alleged in Rio de Janeiro that American naval officers have reconnoitered and roughly surveyed the region and sent their secret reports to Washington.

LATEST PICTURE OF CAPTAIN DREYFUS.

BUSINESS SITUATION.

Chicago Correspondence:

The strength of the general business situation is shown by the small number of failures. At no time in the history of this country have there been so few bankruptcies as now. The liquidation which came with the panic of 1893 was thorough and complete and opened the way for the laying of foundations of the safest and soundest character for legitimate business operations. The outlook, therefore, is still of a promising character. Notwithstanding the great improvement that has taken place in the last two years all of the best trade authorities agree in the prediction that the culminating point of the advance is by no means yet in sight and that there is every reason to believe that present conditions will continue to prevail for several months to come.

The developments of the last week have all been in the direction of improvement. Reports of railroad earnings have shown further gains, the bank clearings are again well ahead of those for the corresponding week last year and from every section comes the news of steadily increasing activity in trade and manufacturing lines. Prices are being well maintained for the reason that the production, great as it has been in the last few months, is still considerably below the demand. Collections are uniformly reported to be good and wholesalers say that the proportion of cash transaction is showing a gratifying increase.

In the security markets there has been some uneasiness shown with regard to the Transvaal situation and money rates have also shown a tendency to harden. The result of this has been that during the latter part of the week prices for stocks showed a considerable decline. On all the recessions, however, good buying has made its appearance in the standard stocks. Trading sentiment at the moment is somewhat mixed, but the best opinion is that as soon as money again eases up the stock market will again develop into a bull affair. Meantime, it is expected to continue to have two sides, with fluctuations covering a range of two or three points.

Business on the Board of Trade suffered to some extent from the state of the weather. The volume of speculative transactions was thereby curtailed, and the lack of activity gave to the markets an appearance of weakness which was more apparent than real. Holders of wheat had to battle with increasing receipts, but were sustained in their efforts by the liberal outflow toward foreign ports and the fact that, notwithstanding almost daily claims of no demand from abroad, the weekly shipments from this country to Europe exceeded by about 40 per cent the combined efforts of all the other exporting countries of the world. An argument for lower prices cannot well be founded on any such condition of affairs.

Corn closed Saturday without any appreciable change in price from that ruling at the close of the previous week. Reports from the country very generally claimed damage more or less from the extremely dry, hot weather, but the speculative appreciation of the amount of injury is displayed in the immobility of the grain's value, notwithstanding the excellence of the shipping demand. It is true that freight rates are hardening, and that would have a natural tendency to depress prices west, but they could not me kept down on that account if there was any doubt of a large crop being practically assured, although it may not be so overwhelmingly heavy as promised two weeks ago.

The dry term has come to an end, and farm work in preparation for another season, temporarily suspended by the lack of moisture, can now be resumed, so that the flourishing condition of things agricultural continues in undiminished degree.

OTIS PLANS CAMPAIGN.

Commander in Philippines Lays Out Work for Army and Navy.

Considerable progress has been made by Maj. Gen. Otis upon the plan of campaign he will open immediately upon the beginning of the dry season. Gen. Otis proposes to divide the army of 64,649 combatants and the mountain batteries and dynamite guns which he will have in December into two divisions, commanded by MacArthur and Lawton. One of these will operate to the north of Manila and the other to the west and south. Each division will operate in two military provinces to be defined by Gen. Otis, but there will be effective and prompt cooperation when it is desirable.

It is expected each commander will have six brigades under his command, the remainder of the troops being employed to garrison Manila and other seaport towns through which the insurgents are receiving supplies. Lawton will be required to make quick movements, and it is proposed to place the cavalry brigade under his command. The navy and marine corps will also be doing effective work. It is understood to be the intention of the administration to enforce a strict blockade of the Philippine ports.

DEWEY SAILS FOR HOME.

Olympia Leaves Gibraltar on Its Way to New York.

With the inspiring air of "Hail Columbia," being played by the band of the British guardship Devastation, Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, steamed out of Gibraltar bay Sunday morning on her way to New York. Just as the Olympia finished turning to run out the narrow entrance to the mole the sun burst through the clouds, making the cruiser stand out like a picture against the background of gray brown rocks, and across the water floated the music of the Olympia's band as it played "God Save the Queen," which was followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Home, Sweet Home."

United States Consul Sprague and Captain Littlefield of the British navy were the last visitors on board and just before they left the admiral expressed satisfaction in being at last on the final run for home.

The New York World prints an extended interview with Admiral Dewey, which was obtained on the eve of the admiral's departure from Gibraltar by a staff correspondent. The admiral feels it his duty to refuse the invitations that have been extended to him from Chicago and the West. After his reception in Washington he will go to Montpelier. From Montpelier the admiral expects to return to Washington for the sessions of the Philippine commission.

BIG FLEET SET FREE.

Imposing Procession Stretches Out Forty Miles in the Lake.

The great vessel blockade caused by the sinking of the steamer Douglas Houghton in the St. Mary's river was lifted Sunday afternoon by the explosion of dynamite in the rocks on which the Houghton rested. The 200 vessels which had been detained by the accident began to move within a half hour and the marine parade, as the mad race for ports began, was fully forty miles long.

Rain and the approaching darkness made it difficult to handle the big fleet in the river. At the entrance to Lake Huron the race of the iron ore boats for ports along Lake Erie from Toledo to Buffalo began in earnest. The combined cargoes of the down-bound boats will aggregate 800,000 tons of iron ore, 12,000,000 feet of lumber, 600,000 bushels of wheat, besides nearly a dozen cargoes of flour and general merchandise.

Conservative business men estimated the loss due to the Houghton's wreck at over $1,000,000. The lifting of the embargo was full of dramatic incident and was only accomplished after a half dozen heavy charges of dynamite had been exploded. The wrecking of the Houghton has caused vessel men to urge the dredging of another channel parallel with the one at the Encampment and the matter will be brought before the Government engineers this fall.

BRINGS TIDINGS OF PEARY.

Steamer Windward Returns from the Far Frozen North.

After having wintered in the far northern polar regions Explorer Peary's steamer has arrived at Brigus, N. F., from West Greenland. Peary penetrated into the "land of the midnight sun," fifty miles farther north than Sverdrup went with the Fram. Jan. 6, while pushing toward Cape Columbia, on the northern extremity of Grinnell Land, Peary had both his feet frozen. He was hauled 100 miles on a sledge to the Windward, where Dr. Diedrick amputated the frozen member. His expedition was fruitful of good results. Besides finding that Buchanan Strait was really a closed bay the party came across the last camp of the lost Greely expedition.

At Fort Conger, Greely's old headquarters, in Lady Franklin bay, Peary found a Greely house and its contents just as it was left by his predecessor fifteen years ago. Peary will remain at Etah this fall and winter, and next February, when the light serves, he will start north, the whole tribe of Arctic Highlanders supporting him.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

CALLING A HALT TO M'KINLEY.

If President McKinley and the men who control him can read the signs of the times aright there surely will be a change in the administration's Philippine policy. The returns from the special election held in the Eighth Congressional District of Missouri ought alone to insure that.

The Eighth was represented for years by Richard P. Bland, whose name is associated with the silver dollar, and who was the chief rival of William J. Bryan for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1896. The vote has been close there for quite a long time, the Republicans electing their candidate in 1894, and being beaten last fall by only 2,800 in a total of over 40,000.

When Bland died the Republicans thought they would surely elect his successor, calculating largely on the popularity of their own candidate, the dissensions among the Democrats, and, above all, the aid the administration at Washington was extending to them. The contest was a most exciting one, with the result that last fall's Democratic majority is increased in an unusually heavy vote for a by-election.

What did it? The answer is simple. Imperial expansion led to Republican defeat. The fight was made on this. The silver question was relegated to the rear. The necessity of slaughtering the Filipinos for the purpose of upholding the flag was brought to the front and fought honestly and bravely by the Democrats, who naturally feared that the brute instinct would prove stronger than reason.

This Missouri district is not the most promising field for a campaign against imperialism. The glamour that surrounds expansion is as bright there as it is anywhere else in the West, where national vainglory is a very strong factor. That the Republicans calculated on winning through this is abundantly proven by the efforts made by the administration and by the big St. Louis newspapers. Their defeat is emphatic, and shows that the American public still stands by the Constitution.—New York News.

War and Pensions.

It may well startle the advocates of an imperialistic policy to learn from the annual report of the Pension Commissioner that there are now on the pension list no less than 991,515 names. If nearly forty years after the beginning of the great war between the States nearly 1,000,000 men are drawing annually over $140,000,000 from the treasury, what must be the final burden to the American taxpayer if President McKinley's plan of conquest is carried out to its logical conclusion? Truly, imperialism is an expensive proposition. Can the people look with equanimity on a plan which carries with it the possibilities of an enormous increase of this burden of taxation to meet the tremendous expense entailed by pensions?

From statistics furnished by the pension bureau, it is learned that since 1866, when the pension list began to assume considerable proportions, $2,370,000,000 has been expended in paying pensions. This is an amount not far from equal to the expenditures of the general government from its organization down to 1860. The pension outlay from 1866 almost equals the highest notch that the public debt attained after the close of the civil war. The debt reached its maximum Aug. 1, 1865, at $2,756,000,000. The pension expenditures since 1865 have been $2,370,000,000. The human mind is incapable of realizing the magnitude of these money values. The pension outlay was double the gross earnings of all the 182,000 miles of railway in the United States during the fiscal year 1898.

Truly, in calculating the cost of imperialism the minor expense of the present is not the only item worthy of consideration.—Chicago Democrat.

Prosperity.

With their usual disregard of truth the Republican politicians are claiming that the business prosperity of the United States is owing to the election of McKinley. Doubtless the business prosperity of the European nations is also owing to the election of McKinley.

When wheat went up to a dollar or more a bushel the Republican shouters claimed that "McKinley did it." But men of sense know that the famine in India and the short crop in Argentina did it.

Now what was the direct result of McKinley's election? Let William J. Bryan tell you. He says: "More banks failed the first six months after the election than ever in the history of the country. If I had been elected it would have been laid at my door. More business houses failed the first six months after the election than ever in the same period of time before. If I had been elected all this would have been my fault. Times got so bad that some people thought that I had been elected, and one man from Texas wrote and congratulated me. But I have not been drawing a salary nor have I been appointing new cabinet officers to fill the places of those who have resigned. Times got better and the goldbug came out and said: 'See; didn't I tell you what would happen if the gold ticket was elected? Didn't I tell you that gold would be discovered in British Columbia?' and did not every man who discovered gold in the Klondike admit that he had been mistaken? The people who said in 1896 that we had enough gold were the ones to do the most rejoicing whe nthat was discovered."

How plainly a frank statement of facts exposes the hypocrisy of these falsifiers who claim credit for acts of providence and seek to fool the people by preposterous assertions. If there is prosperity, the people should give thanks to world-wide conditions which make it possible, and not to McKinley.

Money and the Masses.

When the Ohio State Democratic convention adopted a resolution reaffirming the Chicago platform with full emphasis it served notice on the Republican party that gold legislation in Congress would precipitate the money fight of 1896 in more than its original bitterness.

There can be no doubt that the masses in the United States believe in bimetallism. The fact that 6,500,000 votes were cast for William J. Bryan and free silver in 1896 shows how the people stand, and but for the false promises and coercion of the money power that vote would have been largely increased.

Should the Republican Congress, urged on by the money trust, pass laws making the gold standard the measure of values there will be a revolt on the part of the people which will overthrow the Republican party and make the money issue paramount.

It is not likely, however, that any radical legislation concerning the currency will be passed by the next Congress. McKinley has too clear a knowledge of the fact that there is a large silver sentiment in his own party to allow such gold legislation on the eve of a campaign for re-election.

It has been made apparent that William J. Bryan will be the Democratic candidate for President, and however much the Republican leaders may boast of their loyalty to gold they will think twice before they precipitate a fierce struggle on that specific question.

Know What Imperialism Means.

It should be borne in mind that there are two large and influential elements in the voting population in all the States which may be counted upon to oppose imperialism regardless of party. Both the Germans and the Irish will none of it. The Germans have had experience of the burdens of militarism. They have come to this country to escape compulsory military service and taxation which amounts almost to confiscation—both being the natural and inevitable result of imperialism either in Europe or in America. As for the Irish, the history of their own country is a guaranty that they will have no hand in the enslavement of other races struggling for independence and the right to govern themselves.—Chicago Chronicle.

An Endless Tax Burden.

The tremendous cost of the Philippine war is just beginning to dawn upon the American people. The appropriation for the War Department is $80,000,000 for the current year, but the expenditure for military purposes during the month of July has been $17,500,000. At this rate the expenditures for the year will amount to $220,000,000, leaving a deficit of $140,000,000. The regular appropriation will be exhausted by the time Congress convenes, and must be asked to make good the appalling deficiency that will be found to exist. Then, indeed, will the country get a realization of the frightful cost of the iniquitous war being waged against the Filipinos.—Chattanooga News.

Commission or Omission.

It is hard to tell whether the American people will base their high respect for Dewey the more upon what he has done or upon what he has refrained from doing. His refusal, for example, to accept an invitation to dine with the millionaires of New York commends him mightily to the good will of a great majority of the people of this country. One Belshazzar feast of the kind partaken of by President McKinley at such hands is enough for a decade at least. If Admiral Dewey shall still further refuse to be trotted about the country for the purpose of popularizing the administration's Philippine policy he will be accounted thrice great.—Los Angeles Herald.

McKinley the Aggressor.

Spain could not convey to us any rights which she did not possess and Mr. McKinley cannot justly claim any right not expressly conferred upon him by the constitution or laws of his country. "Our rights in the Philippines" would therefore seem to be limited to the right of self-defense—to repel attacks upon our forces—and to the right of maintaining order and security in the city of Manila which we conquered from Spain. If Mr. McKinley had not claimed and sought to enforce rights far exceeding these there would have been no war there.—New York World.

They Are Reconciled.

We are glad to note that even many of the Northern gold Democrats, and notably some of the gold Democratic newspapers, are exercised very much less than usual over the "horrors" of the Chicago platform. We are inclined to believe that many of them are beginning to realize the wisdom of the policy which would unhesitatingly and unequivocally reaffirm the platform, and to admit the danger to the whole party of any course that would lead to its rejection.—Atlanta Constitution.

Cost of Mititary Rule.

Government revenues last month rose to nearly $50,000,000—exhibiting the continued great productiveness of the war taxes. Expenditures were also very heavy, and leave a deficit of about $8,000,000. The army and navy expenses were about $10,000,000 larger than in the same month of 1897, when matters were on a peace footing. This difference represents to a considerable extent the cost of holding our dependencies under military rule.—Springfield Republican.

Seeking to Borrow Standing.

The poor victims of the monopolies and trusts who vote to uphold the conditions of their own degradation, because they think it adds to their personal dignity to be a member of the same party with the rich and powerful, remind us of the aristocracy that existed among the black slaves in the South based upon the wealth and prominence of their owners.—Washington National Watchman.

A Hard Task.

It will require a census expert of Mark Hanna's choosing to find all the fellows who voted for McKinley in Ohio in '96.—Louisville Dispatch.

AN HISTORIC SPOT.

Place Where John Bull Bade George Washington Good-By.

"It is with the greatest pleasure I inform you that on Sunday last, the 17th inst. (1776), about 9 o'clock in the forenoon, the ministerial army evacuated the town of Boston, and that the forces of the United Colonies are now in actual possession thereof. I beg leave to congratulate you, sir, and the honorable Congress on this happy event, and particularly as it was effected without endangering the lives and property of the remaining unhappy inhabitants. I have great reason to imagine their flight was precipitated by a work, which I had ordered to be thrown up last Saturday night on an eminence at Dorchester, which lies nearest to Boston Neck, called Nook's Hill." Thus wrote Gen. George Washington to the president of Congress March 19, 1776. The city council of Boston has just approved plans submitted by Peabody & Stearns for the Dorchester Heights monument which marks the spot where Gen. Washington stood and watched the British sail away. The plan shows a type of tower common in colonial times, with fountain and memorial tablet on the most conspicuous side. It will be built of old-fashioned brick with dark headers. The trimmings will be of Indiana stone or white terra cotta. The height of the monument to the base of the steeple will be about 75 feet. The original appropriation for the monument was $25,000.

RACE OF THE ILLUMINANTS.

Seven Competitors for Popular Favor Are Now in the Field.

Acetylene gas has the greatest illuminating power of any of the illuminants. The electric arc light stands next, incandescent gas third, and the incandescent electric light fourth. Gas, oil and candles follow in the order named. When gas was first put into practical use in 1805 it was predicted that lamps would be at once abandoned. Yet many people still prefer lamps to any other method of illumination, and the Standard Oil Company, probably the greatest corporation in existence, still makes millions each year out of the sale of kerosene oil. Twenty years ago, when electric lights were put on the market, the prophets foresaw the immediate ruin of the gas business. This prophecy in turn has been falsified, though the electric light business has grown to be one of immense importance. Each new illuminant seems to make a field for itself, without encroaching seriously on its older rivals.

The United States, besides paying the Sultan a salary for coming under the government peaceably, pays $700 a year to his heir and $600 a year to each of his three councilors.

TALKS ON ADVERTISING

The contract recently made by John Wanamaker, the big Philadelphia merchant, for a page of advertising space for one year in the Philadelphia Record, for which he pays $100,000, should serve as an inspiration for every merchant, big and little, the country over. Wanamaker has made his money and built up one of the biggest mercantile establishments in the world through persistent, judicious advertising. Imagine Wanamaker setting back with folded arms and saying: "Oh, everybody knows me; I've been here a lifetime; it is not worth while for me to spend money for advertising!" It certainly looks as though Wanamaker, with his world-wide reputation, would be justified in taking this view of the publicity question if that is a tenable policy for any merchant, anywhere. And yet we find this prince in the mercantile world, whose name, business and location are known in every household throughout the land, spending $100,000 for a year's publicity in a single newspaper. If feeling weak-kneed as to whether it pays to advertise, write and ask John Wanamaker for his opinion.

CAT REFUSED TO DIE.

How an Intelligent Pussy Balked a University Professor's Lecture.

Students of one of the big universities in this city have a cat that has utterly refused to become a martyr to science. Its history is another instance of the refining and elevating influence of science.

Prof. Blank asked J. P. Morgan, the janitor, to get a cat for him, as he wished to illustrate his lecture on "Respiration" by experiments upon the animal. Mr. Morgan succeeded in getting one with the aid of some small boys. When his students had assembled the professor put the cat into the glass receiver of the air pump and began to pump out the air. Before the piston had time to move more than once or twice the cat began to feel very uncomfortable, and, discovering the aperture through which the air was escaping, put her foot on it and thus corked the pipe and stopped the removal of the air.

Several subsequent attempts to carry on the experiments were alike ineffectual, for as soon as the glass cover was put over her and she felt the removal of the air the cat would put her feet over the pipe and keep them pressed there.

The students, struck by the remarkable intelligence shown by the cat, asked the professor to liberate the animal, and loudly cheered her self-possession when the cat, after coolly cleaning herself and smoothing her ruffled fur, jumped down and rubbed against the legs of the students sitting on the front bench. She is now permanently annexed to the college and an object of interest to all visitors.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Not Easily Opened.

"I bought this umbrella in Germany," said the lawyer, "and nobody can open it except myself. Do you notice that little keyhole in the slide? Here's the key on the other end of my watch chain, and until it is inserted and turned the thing is absolutely immovable. Anybody else would find it harder to raise than a Kansas mortgage. On at least a dozen different occasions the umbrella has been stolen, or taken by accident, if you prefer the term, but it always found its way home. You see, my name is cut on the handle, and the umbrella itself is well known to all the attaches of the building. When they see a stranger struggling with it in the doorway on a rainy day they promptly confiscate the property and bring it back. It is such a good scheme I'm surprised the idea hasn't been generally adopted in this country."

Scurvy.

Prior to the present century scurvy was one of the most dreaded diseases on shipboard. Armies were decimated by it and navies rendered useless; sometimes half a ship's crew would be disabled by scurvy. Until the researches showed that it owed its origin to the lack of fresh vegetables, its ravages were frequent and widespread. In 1795 were introduced into the British navy the admirable regulations of provisioning ships of war drawn up by Blane. Since then scurvy has almost disappeared. At the present time it is seen only in exceptional circumstances, such as have arisen in the Klondyke. Even in the long, lonely voyages to the pole our means of furnishing the crew with vegetable food in various forms has prevented any outbreak of importance.—Philadelphia Medical Journal.

NATION'S GREETING TO DEWEY.

Features of the Reception to the Manila Hero in Washington.

The central idea underlying the grand welcome to be given Admiral Dewey in Washington the first week in October is its national character. His arrival at the Capital will mark his real home-coming to the American people, where the officials of the Government will participate, and the magnificently jeweled sword voted by Congress will be presented. To that end all the arrangements will be of a simple but most dignified character. The welcome to the hero of Manila at the National Capital will probably occur on Monday, Oct. 2, although the date will depend upon the length of the celebration in New York, which is still unsettled. The principal features of the reception in Washington, as planned by the citizens, with the co-operation of the President and Cabinet, will be two in number—the presentation of the sword voted by Congress and a night parade. A public reception at the White House will be followed by dinner to the Admiral by President McKinley. The sword will be presented by Secretary Long, at the east front of the Capitol, in the presence of Mr. McKinley and all the members of the Cabinet, late in the afternoon, while the parade, consisting of organizations of all kinds, will be accompanied by an illumination of the city on a scale of beauty never before witnessed in Washington.

The different features of the preparations are in the hands of a central body of citizens and eleven committees, embracing in all over a thousand people. Preparations for the celebration have been in hand for over a month.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and other railroads entering Washington have agreed upon cheap rates for the celebration, and the committee expects that there will be an outpouring of patriotic citizens almost equal to the inauguration of a President.

Rest satisfied with doing well and leave others to talk of you as they please.—Pythagoras.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For some time I have thought of writing to you to let you know of the great benefit I have received from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Soon after the birth of my first child, I commenced to have spells with my spine. Every month I grew worse and at last became so bad that I found I was gradually losing my mind.

"The doctors treated me for female troubles, but I got no better. One doctor told me that I would be insane. I was advised by a friend to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and before I had taken all of the first bottle my neighbors noticed the change in me.

"I have now taken five bottles and cannot find words sufficient to praise it. I advise every woman who is suffering from any female weakness to give it a fair trial. I thank you for your good medicine."—MRS. GERTRUDE M. JOHNSON, JONESBORO, TEXAS.

THE CZARINA VOWS KNOUTING SHALL BE ABOLISHED.

TORTURING A PRISONER.

FLOGGING A PEASANT.

UPON my bended knees, if necessary, I will beg his Majesty to abolish corporal punishment in our holy Russia." With these good words the Czarina sent away the commissioners appointed by her to inquire into the abuses of the knout, the rod and the switch in her husband's empire. Later she registered a vow with her father confessor to make her promise good.

Drs. Ibankow, Buschujew and Lobes, three of the foremost physicians of St. Petersburg, and the great writers Tolstoi and Dostejewski collected the evidences for Alexandra-Feoderovna. The report of these gentlemen is a horrible indictment of autocratic rule.

The incident that moved her Majesty to employ the services of these distinguished gentlemen in her campaign of civilization is almost too revolting for publication. Mme Tschechow, a political prisoner in the penal colony of Lutoga, Siberia, was treated to the rod and the poor woman was taken from the torture platform a corpse.

Count Tolstoi, who enjoys the unusual privilege of addressing his sovereign lady without interference from secretaries and couriers, was able to bring this atrocious crime to her Majesty's attention and the Empress not only promised a prompt investigation, but gave Tolstoi leave to form a committee to inquire into the method and extent of corporal punishment throughout the empire.

Abolition of the laws permitting punishment by rod, switch and other brutal means was promised if the finding favored such radical reform, her Majesty offering to do all in her power to influence her husband to that effect if circumstances warranted action on her part.

The physicians named and the novelist Dostejewski thereupon constituted themselves into a traveling commission for hunting up testimony, while Tolstoi invited victims of official and private brutality throughout the empire to send in well-authenticated reports of their sufferings. From these recitals and the direct and circumstantial evidence gathered by Ibankow and his colleagues the report finally submitted to the Czarina was made up.

At the outset the paper establishes the fact that a hundred and twenty-five millions of Russians out of a total of one hundred and thirty millions may be lawfully spanked, licked, birched, caned or knouted, as, outside of septuagenarians, only nobles, officials above a certain rank, ministers and honorary citizens are exempted from that mode of punishment. Those enumerated are "privileged" persons, but may lose that character by decree of the court in the same way as titles are revocable.

"Soldiers, prisoners and peasants seldom escape corporal punishment for more than a month at a time," says the report, "though numerous ukases ordain that army men shall not be treated to the rod except by decree of court-martial.

"The cruel sub-officers and officers, craving an outlet for their inherent brutality, find ways and means to circumvent the Czar's orders. Soldiers whom they dislike or who are too poor to pay for decent treatment are simply placed into the 'second class' and a second class soldier may be cudgeled to one's heart's content. To cause a soldier's degradation it is but necessary for a petty superior to state that the man has been impertinent.

"Every peasant, his wife and children may be sentenced to fifteen blows by the village council, while the higher imperial officials may beat them as much as they like. In a single district 1,164 peasants were lawfully caned last year. How many received beatings offhand, that was, of course, impossible to ascertain."

There are four classes of beatings, "ordinary, extraordinary, administrative and illegal beatings." The village council and imperial officials may decree ordinary beatings; extraordinary and administrative cudgelings are dealt out in the event of riots, strikes, etc. The worst is, perhaps, that every man, or woman either, wearing European clothes thinks himself or herself privileged to occasionally fall upon some poor native with stick, riding whip or fists. The peasant will never return in kind. Sometimes a maltreated workman, artisan or small merchant will sue his tormentor, but in nine cases out of ten the judge will decide that the gentleman or lady served him right.

"Poor Jews," says the report, "are worse off than even soldiers and peasants, for all classes of Russians, including soldiers and peasants, think they have a right to beat them. As a particularly atrocious case, the affair of a county commissioner named Slopeinski is cited, who knouted a Jew to death merely because he was a Jew."

In the cities, official cudgelings are less frequent than in the villages, but every merchant and artisan boss can have his apprentices birched by the police for the asking, or he can do the birching himself if he feels like it.

In numerous rural districts, say the commissioners, wholesale canings are in order whenever the tax-paying season arrives. The commune is responsible to the treasury for the taxes of every peasant belonging to it and, of course, is interested in speedy collections being made. Therefore, the village council gives the collectors general authority to whip laggards. From the effects of such official blows a peasant died in Jusan a little while ago.

In 1863 and in 1865 the abolishment of the knout was again proclaimed to the sound of trumpets, but Dr. Lobas discovered a month ago that it still reigns supreme in the prisons of Siberia and Sachalin, visited by him in the Czarina's name and vested with supreme authority for investigation. Only they call it "pletj" now, and instead of a single thong of thick leather it has three. Each of these thongs is as thick as a finger and cut in triangular form, tapering off at one end and broad at the other. The thongs are about a yard long and often consist of braided leather, which increases their capacity for inflicting ragged wounds.

The executioner holds the renamed knout in both hands, dragging the long thongs upon the ground between his legs. At a given signal he raises it toward the top of his head by a vigorous movement and then instantly draws it down towards his knees. The thongs fly whistling through the air, and descending on the body of the victim, twine around it like hoops of iron. The sufferer is always naked save for a pair of linen drawers, and lies prostrate on his stomach on a frame diagonally inclined, while his hands are fastened to one end and his feet to the other end.

"By these means his body is so drawn out that he is absolutely incapable of making a single movement," says the physician, "yet when the fearful whip touches him the poor wretch bounds up as if struck by a powerful electric current.

"'One,' counts the overseer. There follows a splashing noise. Blood has been drawn. The executioner retraces his steps and goes through the same movements again, and again, and again to the sound of the monotonous 'two,' 'three,' 'four,' 'five,' 'six,' etc."

ZELLA NICOLAUS.

Her Meteoric Career to Have an End in an Indiana Village.

There are many who remember Zella with a smile at their folly in adolescence. But Zella has found the world to be a glitter and, tired of it all, has returned to her home in a quiet Indiana village, to spend the remaining years of her life "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife." With the exception of a few individuals, Zella will be best remembered by her flash into the life of Howard Gould, while her meteor was speeding across the horizon. More than a year after Zella had left Cincinnati, she appeared in New York. She had been in New York some months when the press dispatches carried out one night a rich bit of gossip to the effect that Zella had a claim against George Gould for $10,000, on which she threatened suit unless instant payment was made.

For a long time both the Goulds and Zella Nicolaus refused to give any information as to the nature of the dispute. Finally it developed that Zella had in some manner obtained a check for $10,000 from Howard Gould, on which it was necessary for her to have the signature of George Gould as trustee. Knowing how the check had been secured, George Gould refused to sign it; not only this, he firmly declined to discuss any plan of compromise. More thin this, Zella declares, he got possession of the check on the pretense of indorsing it, and then refused to give it back. Zella stormed about a great deal, threatening all sorts of legal procedures, but the case never came to court. The public was never taken into the confidence of either party as concerns the final outcome of the dispute. Zella said she was "satisfied," but avoided direct answer to the question as to whether she got the $10,000. She continued to live at the best hotels and to dress in the most magnificent of Paris-made costumes.

Contempt of Court.

On one occasion Thaddeus Stevens appeared before a judge who had, for the first time, occupied the seat on the bench, a position he had obtained in opposition to the recommendation of Mr. Stevens. There was, therefore, more or less constraint between the judge and the advocate. The judge was ill at ease in the presence of so great a man, and made several false or mistaken rulings in the case, so that the matter was getting into very complicated shape. In a fit of apparent petulance, Mr. Stevens threw his papers upon the table and looked around in a very contemptuous manner, whereupon the judge exclaimed:

"Does the learned counsel propose to show contempt to the court?"

Quick as lightning Mr. Stevens replied:

"On the contrary, your honor, the learned counsel is endeavoring to conceal it."—Success.

Woman's Rights Maintained.

The fast express on the Yavapai and Tombstone Railroad was bowling merrily along over the Arizona plains of sand and cactus. Perhaps the sunbeams had warped the track, or perhaps a petrified tree had fallen across it, but at all events, as it sped by the side of a parched river, the train suddenly left the track and rolled down the banks of the so-called stream like a child at play, landing in three feet of water with a splash, and causing a woful mix-up of passengers, cushions, baggage and shoe boxes full of lunch. The occupants of one car extricated themselves from the hodgepodge and sought for means of exit, while stanching as best they could the cuts received from broken glass. But all places of egress seemed jammed tight. Then arose a woman's voice, in emphatic demand: "If you don't let me right out of here, I'll break a window."

A Method of One Painter.

G. F. Watts, who is now in his eighty-third year, constantly exposes his canvases to the full rays of the sun, to let the light burn into the wet paint and dry with it. He believes there need be no fear of fading after a process that so severely tests the colors. Mr. Watts uses no maulstick, his brushes are of a great size and hardness, and he has always been more fond of stippling than of delicate brush work, often pounding the color into his canvas to insure permanence. He has rarely worked directly from the living model, but modeled fragmentary studies in wax and clay for the particular parts of the figure required in his picture.

Expensive Peace.

Almost every nation, with the exception of the United States and Great Britain, is overtaxed to meet the expenses of maintaining its army and navy. France runs behind to the amount of $1,000,000,000, Austria has an annual deficit of $80,000,000, Russia of $50,000,000 and Italy of $30,000,000.

It is a wonder women don't call wrinkles Exhibit A, and gray hairs Exhibit B, in evidence of their husbands' ill treatment.

The invitations to a late wedding were all verbal, because the man had no middle name that would look imposing on a wedding card.

Dull children are more agreeable than those who are impudently smart, and do better in life.

When people become indignant, they nearly always abuse the wrong man.

Still the Purist.

The principal of the public schools in one of the large towns of Kansas, so the story goes, was a great stickler for the purity of the language.

One sultry day during an exceedingly hot summer that portion of the town in which he resided was visited by one of those destructive whirling storms that sometimes sweep over the country, East as well as West, and the house of the "professor," as he was familiarly called, was totally wrecked.

The only person in the building who seemed to be seriously injured, strange to say, was the professor.

He was unconscious when taken out from under the debris, but the fresh air revived him. His lips moved and anxious friends bent over him to listen.

"I wish you to understand," he said, "that this was not a cyclone, but a tornado."

Then he became temporarily unconscious again.

JOHN C. HUBINGER.

Remarkable Career of a Well-Known Western Capitalist, Manufacturer and Philanthropist.

Among the leaders of the progressive element for which the midle west is famous, Mr. John C. Hubinger, of Keokuk, Ia., reigns without a peer. As a manufacturer, as an enterprising capitalist and as a philanthropist his fame has spread over many states, and his financial enterprises have developed many obscure towns into progressive, thrifty and wide-awake cities. Mr. Hubinger, although but 47 years of age, can look back upon scores of commercial victories, each one of which has benefited mankind, for his liberality is as bountiful as his business sagacity is marvelous. He was born in New Orleans, La., his parents being of French and German origin. When he was four years old, his family removed to Kentucky, in which state young Hubinger received a public school education. Almost before reaching man's estate he secured patents on a number of valuable mechanical inventions, thereby laying the foundation of his present fortune.

By inclination and force of circumstances his attention was early directed to the manufacture of starch by improved processes, and in the course of time he became the head of a concern having an annual business of millions of dollars. But genuine ambition never quite satisfied with existing conditions, works ever toward perfection, and after years of painstaking study and research Mr. Hubinger has made a discovery, which he considers the crowning event of his wonderful career, and which is embodied in a new article of commerce, known as Red Cross Starch (Red Cross trade mark.) He is planning to distribute millions of packages of this starch to the housewives of America, at a merely nominal price to the consumer, in order to make its merits known without delay. Thus, for but 5 cents two large 10c packages of Red Cross Starch may be had, together with two magnificent Shakespearean views printed in 12 beautiful colors, or a Twentieth Century Girl Calendar; or for only 20 cents 10 packages of the starch and the entire series of eight Shakespearean views and one Twentieth Century Girl Calendar—views alone easily worth $1.00. Watch this paper for future premium announcements, of which every lady will certainly want to take advantage.

While Mr. Hubinger will devote his best energies to the manufacture of this new and wonderful starch, he will not retire from the various financial enterprises in which he is interested—street railways, electric lighting plants and the Mississippi Valley Telephone Co., with 10,000 telephone subscribers in Minneapolis and St. Paul—nor will his augmented activity interfere with his social obligations and exercise of the splendid hospitality which he dispenses at his palatial Keokuk home. Mr. Hubinger's family, consisting of himself, wife and four children, is the pivot around which his activity revolves, and while fond of promoting great enterprises, he is still fonder of his home circle, where he spends every moment of time not taken up by business or public cares.

MANY young women are completely prostrated for a week out of every month by menstrual sufferings. The terrors of menstruation overshadow their whole lives. How needless this is in most cases is shown by the thousands of grateful letters constantly coming to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., from women she has helped.

HAGGARD FACES IN WOMEN

MISS JOIE SAUL, Dover, Mich., writes as follows to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I suffered untold agony every month and could get no relief until I tried your medicine; your letter of advice and a few bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have made me the happiest woman alive. I shall bless you as long as I live."

MISS ROSA HELDEN, 126 W. Cleveland Ave., Canton, O., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Four years ago I had almost given up hope of ever being well again. I was afflicted with those dreadful headache spells which would sometimes last three or four days. Also had backache, bearing-down pains, leucorrhœa, dizziness, and terrible pains at monthly periods confining me to my bed. After reading so many testimonials for your medicine, I concluded to try it. I began to pick up after taking the first bottle, and have continued to gain rapidly, and now feel like a different woman. I can recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in highest terms to all sick women."

Pain leaves its mark. Faces become pale and thin. Features grow sharp and haggard. The stamp of suffering is unmistakable. Write to Mrs. Pinkham for aid. Her experience is the widest in the world and her advice is free.

HEADACHE

is only a symptom—not a disease. So are Backache, Nervousness, Dizziness and the Blues. They all come from an unhealthy state of the menstrual organs. If you suffer from any of these symptoms—if you feel tired and languid in the morning and wish you could lie in bed another hour or two—if there is a bad taste in the mouth, and no appetite—if there is pain in the side, back or abdomen—BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR will bring about a sure cure. The doctor may call your trouble some high-sounding Latin name, but never mind the name. The trouble is in the menstrual organs, and Bradfield's Female Regulator will restore you to health and regulate the menses like clockwork.

Former Auburn Folks.

J. A. McIntyre while Sundaying in Chicago, Ill., visited in the home of C. M. Merica and family. Estella is still traveling with a concert company and was in Duluth, Minn. She is meeting with good success and receiving very fine indorsements everywhere. Mr. Merica has not lost any of his old time interest in the schools of DeKalb and spoke of the institute with enthusiam, and said it was difficult to realize the change that had taken place in the teaching force. He said: "In looking over the list of teachers at ahe institute as published in the COURIER I find that two years have made a great change. One half of the teachers now enrolled were not teachers when I left the county. One hundred and eighty-eight were enrolled; of these 97 have taken up the work leaving only 91 of my old teachers. It is true that most of the new names are familiar to me as pupils when I visited schools. Yet as a DeKalb county institute I would have felt myself quite a stranger had I had the pleasure of attending the session." Mr. McIntyre also learned that F. K. Blake is taking hold of his new duties as City Alderman with ease and ability. He has introduced an ordinance which is creating considerable interest, to reduce the price of gas from $1.10 to 50 cents per thousand. The DeKalb man has no sympathy for monopolies. The other members of the DeKalb colony in Chicago all seem to be doing well.

The Dewey Parade.

The parade will be for three days.

Sept. 28, Admiral Sampson and the Mayor go to meet Dewey.

Sept. 29, the great naval parade of warships and all others up North river, headed by the Olympia, which will also lead in firing salutes as they pass Grant's tomb.

Sept. 30, is the great land parade with 32,000 men, militia and regulars in line, besides all others, such as orders and societies and citizens. The militia will be from New York, Ohio, New Jersey, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Connecticut, Texas, Florida, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Missouri and Mississippi. Each body of state troops will be headed by its governor. Gen. Roe, chief marshal, is followed by Admiral Dewey and Mayor VanWyck. Then comes Sousa's band of 100 pieces, then the officers and sailors of the Olympia, then the men from the North Atlantic squadron, then the G. A. R. etc., etc.

Brave Men Fall

Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles as well as women, and all feel the results in loss of appetite, poisons in the blood, backache, nervousness, headache and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that. Listen to J. W. Gardner, Idaville, Ind. He says: "Electric Bitters are just the thing for a man when he is all run down, and don't care whether he lives or dies. It did more to give me new strength and good appetite than anything I could take. I can now eat anything and have a new lease on life." Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's drug store. Every bottle guaranteed.

New Agent in War.

London Cable to New York Sun: Experiments in the ether wave system of transmitting electricity were conducted at Newbury recently. A small powder magazine located 400 yards from the sending point was exploded without the use of wires. The experiments demonstrated the feasibility of using the system for destroying mines, etc., in war.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P. Barber's, Corunna.

Some Hopes Yet.

Bert Lane brings word that Frank Rempis at Waterloo shows some signs of improvement. Our readers will remember he was shot by accident while hunting in the mountains out west. He was hit in the neck and that paralyzed him from that point down. He was brought home and has been in a dangerous conditon ever since, his death being a possible thing at any hour. Now, he seems to be gaining the use of a muscle or so, and seems improving. Dr. Broughton, who is in charge, talks of getting Dr. Senn, the famous surgeon of Chicago to come down and operate on the wounded man and see if the ball can be extracted or some relief given.

HEADACHE

is only a symptom—not a disease. So are Backache, Nervousness, Dizziness and the Blues. They all come from an unhealthy state of the menstrual organs. If you suffer from any of these symptoms—if you feel tired and languid in the morning and wish you could lie in bed another hour or two—if there is a bad taste in the mouth, and no appetite—if there is pain in the side, back or abdomen—BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR will bring about a sure cure. The doctor may call your trouble some high-sounding Latin name, but never mind the name. The trouble is in the menstrual organs, and Bradfield's Female Regulator will restore you to health and regulate the menses like clockwork.

THE HELMS CASE

So much talk has been indulged in both in the COURIER and among the people, in regard to this case that we gladly give place to an explanation by Mr. Pomeroy, which says:

The Auburn Prosecutor had nothing to do with the case, The crime was committed at Garrett. Lawyer Mountz is the deputy prosecutor at that place, and has taken full charge of the case, and will assist the prosecutor at Fort Wayne, whose duty it is to prosecute the case since the change has been granted.

Mr. Mountz has given the case careful consideration and will be fully prepared with the evidence when the case comes up for final hearing.

The case was set for trial on the 19th. No notice of the date of the trial was sent to any of the prosecutors of this district. The Fort Wayne prosecutor wrote to Judge Hartman last Saturday and told him to notify Mr. Mountz. The letter was forwarded to Judge Hartman who was out of town and he forwarded it to Mr. Mountz, but it did not reach Mountz until Monday afternoon. Mr. Mountz at once telephoned to the Fort Wayne prosecutor that it would be impossible to get the witnesses there the next day in time for the trial, whereupon the Fort Wayne prosecutor agreed to have the case continued, which was done accordingly. And all the talk of the neglect of the Auburn prosecutor, and the dismissal of Helms without trial, is without cause.

A Serious Question.

An exchange says: "The judicial department of the German Empire has recently been called upon to pass on the proper abbreviation for 1900. The common abbreviation for 1899 is of course, '99, but the German judges have decided that '00 would not do at all for the first year of the next century. Accordingly, the year will have to be written out in full on all the German documents."

This is quite a question of course. Still, the two naughts will represent the year 1900 as plainly as '99 represents this year. What else can it represent? Everybody will know what is meant. But we object to their calling the year 1900 "the first of the next century."

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang ye, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER IX.

"Either honesty is dying out in the land," said the Statesman as he sat on the east part of the band stand, in the big seat made for Jake Raut, "or else we are all losing faith in one another. Look at a lot of the recently made laws in which half the citizens of the county are set to watching the other half. To illustrate:

Any fine day in June or July a man, if living in the country, is liable to be called on to take his team and go out and work on the roads. From the very start, he has to watch his team and see that it does the proper amount of work and does it in the proper way. And so the watching begins.

1. The teamster watches his horses to see they do their work honestly.

2. The supervisor watches the teamster to see that he does his work honestly.

3. The township trustee watches the supervisor to see that he does his work honestly.

4. The township advisory board must watch the trustee to see that he does his work honestly.

5. The county officers must watch the trustee and his advisory board to see that they do their work honestly.

6. The board of county commissioners watch the county officers to see that they do their work honestly.

7. The county council must watch the board of county commissioners to see that they do their work honestly.

8. What we need now is somebody to watch the county council to see that they do their work honestly.

9. What we also need is somebody else to watch the somebody that watches the county council to see that they do their work honestly.

10. What we greatly need is a set of men to watch the men, who watch the men who watch the council, who watch the officers, who watch the trustees, who watch the supervisors, who watch the men, who watch the horses that work on the roads our fathers built."

At the conclusion of this there was a long discussion as to whether all this string of laws was necessary. As the House of the band stand is made up of reliable and honest taxpayers, it was the general opinion that the new laws should be repealed.

Just then a strange darkey went by going west on Ninth street as if he was going to join the sewer force on Railroad street. At once the attention of the House was taken up with characteristic darkey stories. Some hit off the weakness of one sort of darkey, and another would hit off a different one. The one we remember best, was credited to the late Judge McClellan. We are sorry we cannot give it in his own inimitable style.

A few years ago, when the big lottery at New Orleans was in full blast, rumor has it that an old "uncle" in one of the back districts of South Carolina, had been for years, investing his small earnings in the lottery, and that luck hit him at last. He drew a capital prize of $50,000. He took his check to the bank, and the cashier told him it was all right, and asked if he wanted the money on it. The old darkey 'lowed he'd take the money. So the cashier opened the big sate and began counting and piling up the cash. As the pile of bills grew higher, the old negro's eyes opened wider, and the rims of white showerd bigger and bigger. But the counting went briskly on. The pile of bills kept mounting higher and the old man's nerves could stand the strain no longer. "Fo' de Lawd, boss," said he, "be all dem bills for me?" "Course," said the cashier, "and there's a lot more of 'em to come. You're in great luck, uncle." "Fo' Gawd's sake stop, boss." yelled the now thoroughly rattled darkey. "Put away all dem bills, and jes give me a dolla' an' a half; I ain' no hog."

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

Indiana W. C. T. U. Convention, Marion, October 6 to 10.

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., November 20 to 27.

I put my six-year old boy on one side of the balance, and it takes a Jesus on the other to weigh him down, for He died for Willie.

Then think! For filthy lucre we crucify our Lord and plunge the immortal boy into hell.!

How long shall we sell and prostitute, all that is dear to us, to the enemy, whose hands are red, whose locks are serpents, whose residences are dark alleys, midnight revels, concocting murder and death in his drugs? Shall we let loose these hounds of hell to track our young to death and destruction? Let every mother, father say "No."

In view then of the fact that God sees us, and that we must all be judged by Him at the last, let us band together from east and west, north and south, and with one solemn oath declare everlasting, persistent, unrelenting warfare on rum and eternal death to alcohol, and may the God of battles give to us victory.

Americans' "Old Glory" shall yet float stainless over free men, freed from tyrant alcohol's oppression, 'Tis true. Believe it. Our cause can never die.

Then temperance forever, hurrah then hurrah—
Down with the tyrant and up with the stars.
So we'll rally round "Old Glory," boys, rally once again,
Shouting for temperance and freedom.

The Broom Corn Harvest.

Broom corn harvest has hustled the people of Douglas and Coles Co. Ill., for a week or two. The tops must be cut off at the proper length, and laid straight before the frost comes. For if they are standing when the frost comes, the heads bend over and are not good for brooms, which must have straight heads. Much of this work is done by "hobos" as they are called there. They are men who start with the early crops on the Gulf such as berries, and help care for each successive crop as they go north. They end the season among the cranberry fields of Wisconsin. "Jaspers" are another set of men, who cut a great deal of broom corn. They are mainly from Indiana and Illinois and do not travel to any place except the broom corn fields. They get their name from the fact, that at first, many came from Jasper county, Ill. The raising of broom corn has proved quite profitable, though some years the crop does not mature. It is said the seeds were first brought from France by Benjamin Franklin.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

URGE CHANGE.

Philippine Commissioners Will Report Against Administration of Gen. Otis.

A dispatch from Manila, via Hong Kong, says: The Commissioners sent to the Philippines by President McKinley will report unanimously against the administration of Gen. Otis. They will urge a change.

Washington special: The Manila news that the Commissioners will report unfavorably to Gen. Otis has occasioned no surprise here. Secretary Root and Gen. Corbin would not discuss it, but it is known that Gen. Otis and the Commissioners were not in hearty accord. Well informed army officers say that Gen. Otis would long ago have been relieved had it not been for the correspondents' round robin. President McKinley did not like to seem to be too much moved by it. He tried continually apologizing for Gen. Otis. He will not be allowed full sway when the fall campaign opens. Gen. Miles and Gen. Merritt are still under consideration.

"I AM INNOCENT,"

Was the First Declaration of Captain Dreyfus When a Free Man.

Paris special: The Aurora publishes the following declaration from former Capt. Dreyfus:

"The Government of the Republic has given me my liberty. But liberty is nothing to me without honor. From to-day I shall continue to seek reparation for the frightful judicial error of which I remain the victim.

"I wish France to know by a definite judgment that I am innocent. My heart will only be at rest when there remains not a single Frenchman who imputes to me the abominable crime perpetrated by another."

(Signed) ALFRED DREYFUS.

It is believed here that Dreyfus is going to America.

Major Hartman Rewarded.

Paris special: M. Menard, Clerk of the Court of Cassation, has been dismissed after thirty-one years' service for giving M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire, former chief of the civil section of that court, information hurtful to Dreyfus, which fact transpired during revision inquiry.

Major Hartman of the artillery, who gave testimony at the Rennes court martial favorable to Dreyfus, has been promoted to be assistant manager of the army gun factory at Puteaux.

Michigan Cucumber Crop Ruined.

The entire cucumber crop in the district northeast of Benton Harbor, Mich., representing over two million bushels of small pickles per season for the last ten years, has in the last ten days been completely destroyed by a foreign small red bug. The new pest, although much smaller, belongs to the lady bug family. The total loss to growers is estimated at over $100,000.

Recruiting Canadians.

Toronto (Ont.) special: Col. Hughes of Lindsay, has undertaken to raise a regiment of Canadians for service in the Transvaal should war break out. In a letter to the press he says the Hon. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works, has promised to raise a proportionate number of men from among his fellow countrymen in Quebec.

Confesses to Murder.

Richard Honeck, who recently murdered Walter Koeller at Chicago, pleaded guilty. "Do you know that you can be hanged on your plea?" asked the Judge, prompted at the want of fear shown by the prisoner. "I do," replied Honeck. "I am guilty." Herman Hundhausen, implicated with Honeck, pleaded not guilty.

Three Killed.

A Frisco passenger train collided with a freight at Swope Park, nine miles southeast of Kansas City, Mo. Three were killed. The dead are B. F. Reddick, engineer of the freight; Charles Ridock, the passenger fireman, and —— Herlson, a brakeman. Fred Laker will die. Six persons were injured.

The Hoon Affair

Gen. Otis cables that Privat Hoon of Ohio, who complained that he was sentenced to imprisonment for simply writing a letter to the Commanding General, was not sentenced for that, but for forging officers' signatures to his petition for promotion.

An Old Church Ruined.

A dispatch from Lima, Peru, says: A great fire almost completely destroyed the famous and beautiful church of San Francisco, founded by Pizarro, in 1535.

Terrible Earthquake in Asia Minor.

A dispatch from Smyrna, Asia Minor, says: There was a disastrous earthquake at Aidit, a town in Mender, eighty-one miles southeast of this place. Hundreds of persons were killed in the valley of Menderez.

Farmer and Family Killed.

While Jasper Beebe, son, daughter and two grandchildren were crossing the C., B. & Q. Railroad tracks four miles east of Albia, Iowa, passenger train No. 3 crashed into the vehicle, killing all but one of the children.

Russia to Close All Ports.

Emperor Nicholas has signed a ukase decreeing that when the middle Europe canal and the Siberian railway are completed in 1901 all important Russian ports on the Pacific, Baltic and the Black sea shall be closed forever to any but Russian ships.

Negro Hanged for Robbery.

Noah Finley, anegro, was hanged at Pulaski, Va. Finley's crime was highway robbery and attempted murder and his execution was the only instance in late years in which the extreme penalty has been imposed in Virginia for this offense.

AUGUST'S EXCESS OF EXPORTS.

Relation of United States Business to That of Other Countries.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "Better than all other news is the record of August commerce, which shows the relation of United States business to that of other countries. Exports were $20,082,875 larger than ever before in August, and exceeded imports by $37,929,699, partly because exports of staples were $9,366,978 larger than last year, but also because exports of other products, mainly manufacturing, were $10,349,000 larger than last year and larger than any other month of any year. The heavy sales of wool—12,056,900 pounds for the week, and 21,282,100 pounds for two weeks, against 36,629,400 pounds in 1898—are largely due to heavy manufacturing purchases at Boston, but there, as elsewhere, the buying is mostly based on expectation that London sales will show an important advance. Prices here are stiff, and the demand for woolen goods of all sorts is strong. Failures for the week have been 149 in the United States, against 174 last year, and 32 in Canada, against 23 last year."

TO FORTIFY NEW POSSESSIONS.

Comprehensive Plans Will Be Reported to Congress.

Brig. Gen. Wilson, chief of engineers, will submit to Congress a comprehensive scheme for the defense of Porto Rico. Reports on the necessary fortifications have been made to Gen. Wilson by engineer officers sent to the island. It is said the cost of the project is small, the defenses constructed by the Spaniards being utilized in part. The preparation of plans for the fortification of Hawaii is stopped because of the failure of the Navy Department to decide regarding the establishment of a naval station at Pearl Harbor. Land is held at fancy prices and the department does not intend to pay more than it really is worth. Until the Navy Department acts nothing will be done in the way of fortification. It is understood that Capt. Leary at Guam will report upon fortifications for that island. Nothing will be done looking toward fortifications in the Philippines until the war is ended.

PLANS A BIG CATTLE RANCH.

Mr. Swift, the Chicago Packer, Said to Be Behind the Undertaking.

E. F. Swift, the Chicago packer, was in Kansas City the other day for a short time. It is reported that his visit was in connection with the organization of a big ranch company, which is to have headquarters at Kansas City. The company will be incorporated under the laws of Missouri, so the report says. It is said Charles Coffman, head cattle buyer of the Swift Packing Company; George T. Hall of Kansas City and Frank Tomlinson, a wealthy Kansas cattleman, are associated with Mr. Swift. The new company, it is reported, has purchased the O'Keefe ranch, near Dawson, Texas, in the Panhandle country. The ranch contains 180,000 acres and owns the famous "Fish" brand of cattle. The purchase price is said to have been in the neighborhood of $175,000.

SAYS TASCOTT IS IN ALASKA.

Gold-Seeker from Cape Noma Tells a Story of the Chicago Man.

William Tascott, who is charged with the murder of A. J. Snell, the Chicago millionaire, in 1888, is now at Cape Nome, Alaska, if the story brought from the north by Samuel Rigler is correct. Some weeks ago, Rigler says, a half-dead man, with a companion, claiming to hail from Dawson, staggered into a hut occupied by himself and half a dozen miners, begging to be allowed to die there. The invalid remained in the camp a whole week and the first four days his death was momentarily expected. The third night after his arrival the stranger, expecting to die before daylight, confessed to being the Chicago murderer. Tascott lived, and two days after he made what was considered his dying declaration he, his partner and their outfit disappeared."

Entire Block Destroyed.

Practically an entire block of buildings was destroyed by fire at Los Angeles, Cal. The losers are the Los Angeles Farming and Milling Company, the Perry Mill and Lumber Company and J. R. Holbrook, dealer in iron pipe and well casings. Three men were injured in the fire, two of them probably fatally. The property loss will reach $250,000.

Three Trainmen Meet Death.

Three men were killed and twenty freight cars destroyed at Paul, a small station on the Missouri Pacific Railroad eight miles south of Nebraska City, Neb. Freight train No. 124, running very fast to make Julian as a siding point, crashed through a bridge two miles south of Paul. The twenty cars piled on top of the engine, and the wreck caught fire.

Another Railroad in Alaska.

Alfred Day, representing a Philadelphia syndicate, is shipping men and material to Alaska for the construction of the second railroad in that territory. The road is to be fifteen miles long and to be used in connection with the development of 25,000 acres of coal lands on Kachkemo bay, Cook inlet.

Killed Her Babes and Herself.

As a result of domestic difficulty, Mrs. Earne Phillips of Scotia, Neb., forced her two children, aged 1 and 2 years, to take carbolic acid and then swallowed a dose of the poison herself. The husband found all three lying upon the floor dead when he returned from the field, where he had been at work.

Flames Cause Heavy Loss.

Fire which started in the basement kiteben of Seaver's bakery, at 86 State street, Chicago, spread into the Economical drug store and for a time threatened the complete destruction of the entire Borden block, the first floor of which is occupied by these concerns. The flames caused damage estimated at $50,000.

Odd Constitution in Corea.

Corea has at last a written constitution. It has nine articles, all dwelling upon the powers and prerogatives of the Emperor, and containing no mention whatever of any rights or privilege belonging to any other person in the realm. It is unique in the field of constitutional history.

Yaquis Torture Their Chief.

Advices from Sonora show that Chief Tetabiate of the Yaquis, who remained loyal to the Mexican Government in the recent Indian outbreak, was seized by the rebels and cruelly tortured, being stripped, slashed with knives and his body mutilated.

Marriage Licenses Come High.

The Chickasaw Legislature, in session at Tishomingo, I. T., passed a bill raising the fee for marriage licenses from $50 to $1,000. The measure is aimed at white men who would marry into the tribe to profit by the annuities and lease money drawn by women Chickasaws.

Lively Fire in New York.

The two-story brick building at Nos. 107 to 111 East 128th street, New York, was destroyed by fire. The building was occupied by A. S. Nichols, manufacturer of marble and wooden mantels and tilings. The loss to building, stock and machinery will amount to about $250,000.

Valise Full of Money Missing.

B. R. Banning, a Hawaiian capitalist, arrived from Honolulu and registered at the Occidental, San Francisco. Among his effects was a valise containing, it is said, between $30,000 and $50,000 in bank notes, bonds and sugar stocks. A few hours after his arrival he missed the valise. It is thought that Mr. Banning's property was sent on board the Nippon Maru by mistake and is now on its way back to Honolulu.

A JEALOUS WOMAN'S WORK.

Mrs. Judson Herrendeen Shoots Her Husband and Fatally Wounds Herself.

As a result of a domestic quarrel at Port Huron, Mich., Judson Herrendeen has three bullets in his body, and Mrs. Herrendeen is dead. After the shots were fired the wounded man was found staggering about his apartments with blood pouring from three wounds. His wife lay across her bed unconscious, with a bullet wound in the temple. Herrendeen says his wife suddenly rose from the breakfast table and left the room. She returned, revolver in hand, and fired three shots at him, wounding him in the neck, abdomen and elbow. Herrendeen's recovery is very doubtful. The wife's jealousy appears to have caused the tragedy.

HAWAII WANTS IMMIGRANTS.

Will Invite the Better Classes from Sweden and Northern Italy.

Immigration from the north of Italy and from Sweden is to be invited by Hawaii. The Hawaiian minister of finance was at the Treasury Department at Washington the other day to consult officials. He said that he was on his way to Europe to secure immigrants from among the better classes in northern Italy and Sweden to Hawaii, and inquired if any obstacle would be placed in the way under the United States immigration laws. Assistant Secretary Taylor told him that, as Congress had not yet extended the immigration laws to Hawaii, Government could not interfere, and, moreover, had no desire to do so if the class of immigrants secured was good.

HUNDREDS DIE IN A STORM.

Hurricane Ravages Japanese Provinces, Causing Great Loss of Life.

A storm, the most fruitful in fatalities that Japan has ever known, grazed the east coast of Kiushiu, and, crossing Shikoku by the provinces of Tosa and Sanuki, invaded the main island via Bizen and Bitchiu, emerging into the Japan sea finally through Isumo and Hoki. The prefectures of Kochi, Takamatsu, Ehime and Okayama suffered most, a total of 325 lives in all being officially reported lost, with 11,335 houses overthrown or inundated in Kochi, Takamatsu and Okayama. Ehime reported no financial loss, but the death of 1,500 residents.

Kill Sheep for Revenge.

Masked men attacked the sheep camp of the Warren Live Stock Company, twenty-five miles northwest of Sterling, Colo., beating the herder, a young man named Crain, nearly to death, shooting about 100 sheep, and scattering 1,500 more. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of four men living in the vicinity.

Farnham, N. Y., Destroyed by Flames.

Almost the entire business section of Farnham, N. Y., was wiped out of existence by fire. The loss is between $200,000 and $250,000. Among the buildings destroyed were the Erie Preserving Company's canning factory, the National Hotel and between fifteen and twenty dwellings.

Flames at Rockaway Beach.

Two and a half blocks of summer hotels, bathing pavilions, dancing pavilions, seaside theaters and smaller buildings went up in flames and smoke on the ocean front at Holland's station, Rockaway Beach, L. I. Two men were badly injured—one probably fatally—by jumping from a blazing roof.

Escaped Convict Surrenders.

Charles O. Sommers, formerly a Pinkerton detective and an escaped convict from the Mississippi penitentiary, is again within prison walls in Mississippi. He journeyed all the way from Dawson City, Alaska, to surrender himself. He said he was tired of "liberty that does not mean freedom."

Magazine Blown to Atoms.

SEVEN NEGROES SHOT

MINERS MEET IN A DEADLY BATTLE.

Blacks Flee for Their Lives, but Are Brought Down by Bullets of White Pursuers—Troops Sent to Prevent Further Bloodshed.

In a pitched battle between negro and white miners, fought in the main street of Carterville, Ill., Sunday, seven of the colored men were killed and two others wounded. It was only Monday of the previous week that the State militia, which had been on duty there for several months, was withdrawn, it being considered that all danger of trouble was past. After the departure of the troops, however, it appears that the bitter feeling between the races took new life, Sunday's outbreak proving the culmination. Both sides insist that the other was responsible for the deadly combat.

Thirteen non-union colored miners left their homes at Brush's mines, north of the town, shortly before noon and came down to the Illinois Central station intending to take the Paducah express for Marion. It has been the custom of Brush's non-union negro miners for several weeks, or a squad of twelve of fifteen of them, to go to Marion every Sunday, remain for the night services at the colored church and return home on the 11:10 p. m. train. These negroes had been at the Carterville station only a few minutes when twenty-five or thirty union miners, most of them armed with rifles, appeared on the scene. When they came up they found several of the negroes inside the waiting room, the remainder on the platform.

The black men were immediately ordered by the white miners to leave there and to leave at once. The order was soon repeated to them, with another order to leave the town and that quickly. According to unprejudiced witnesses, the negroes commenced to obey the orders, going northwest on the railroad tracks. When they had proceeded about 100 yards to where the main street of the town crosses the railroad tracks one of the negroes turned, drew his revolver and fired back at the crowd, which was then advancing toward them.

This was a signal for a general onslaught by the white miners. They opened a deadly fire on the negroes, who scattered like scared sheep. The white miners fired over 100 shots at the fleeing negroes, and it is said that many shots were fired at them from the windows of houses and from barns and outhouses. Every few minutes one of the fleeing men would stagger, throw up his hands and topple to the earth. The pursuers did not stop, but kept up their rain of lead until the few survivors had gotten beyond range. These dead negroes fell along the railroad track not more than 200 yards from the station.

The infuriated miners followed up their bloody work and those of the unfortunate negroes who were not killed when they first fell were afterward riddled with bullets at short range or clubbed to death with the butts of guns. Two of the wounded managed to get away from the scene of slaughter and walked to within a short distance of the mines, where their dead bodies were found later in the day.

This clash is the outcome of differences between the operators and union continuing over several years. The strike has been more for a recognition of the union than because of wages. Rioting, beginning in June last, resulted in the calling out of State troops, which were withdrawn from the town only a week before.

Gov. Tanner, on receipt of the news of the riot, immediately ordered Lieut. Lowden of Company C of Carbondale to proceed with his command at once to Carterville, procuring a special train if necessary. Two companies of the Fourth regiment, under command of Col. Bennett, were also ordered to the scene of the trouble.

KANSAS' GREAT CORN CROP.

This Year's Yield Is the Largest in History.

The 1899 Kansas corn crop is ready for harvesting and the number of bushels yielded is far in excess of that ever produced by any other State of the Union in any one year or by any equal area of the world.

The acreage of the State was 9,132,000 acres. The last report of the United States Agricultural Department gave the condition at 106, putting the State far in the lead of all other States. The condition was vastly improved since that estimate was made.

Kansas has raised 400,000,000 bushels of corn. The human mind fails to grasp the meaning of the expression. To move the crop would require 22,500 trains of cars, giving forty cars to the train. Were each car forty feet long, each train would equal 1,600 feet in length without locomotive and caboose, then multiplying the 22,500 trains by 1,600 feet, the length of each train, we have 360,000,000 feet. Dividing that number by the number of feet per mile, to wit, 5,280, it makes 6,818 miles, twice the distance from New York to London.

BERMUDA SWEPT BY STORM.

Great Damage to Property, but No Loss of Life.

The Island of Bermuda was swept by a hurricane Wednesday night, which, though resulting in no loss of life, caused damages to property that will run well into the thousands. The storm raged all night and many buildings were wrecked, including the Government house. It was the worst blow since the hurricane of 1880. There was considerable damage done at the military camp, where the city hall, public gardens and hotels were wrecked, and at the dock yards alone the loss is estimated at £100,000. It is a curious coincidence that the great gale of 1839 occurred on Sept. 11 and 12, and this one was on Sept. 12 and 13.

ELECTIONS THIS FALL.

State Officers and Legislators to Be Voted For in Twelve States.

Although this is an "off year" politically, several State elections to be held in November are of interest. They will occur on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Iowa will choose Governor, Lieutenant Governor, judge of the Supreme Court, superintendent of instruction and railroad commissioner, also members of the Legislature. For State officers there are five regularly nominated tickets in the field—Democratic, Republican, Populist, Prohibition and United Christian.

Kentucky will elect Governor and seven other State officers and Legislature, and the canvass is being aggressively waged, especially because of the nomination of an independent Democratic ticket, headed by John Young Brown for Governor, against the regular party ticket, headed by William Goebel. There are four other tickets for State officers—Republican, Populist, Prohibition and Socialist-Labor.

Maryland will elect Governor, Attorney General, Comptroller and Legislature, and vote upon a proposed amendment to the constitution of the State. For State officers there are five tickets in the field—Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, Social Democratic and Union Reform.

Massachusetts will elect Governor and five other State officers and Legislature. Only one ticket has yet been nominated, that of the Social Democrats.

Mississippi will elect Governor and nine other State officers and Legislature. For the State officers there are two tickets in the field—Democratic and Populist. The people of Mississippi will also vote upon a proposed amendment to the State constitution. The Legislature will choose a United States Senator to fill out the term, ending March 4, 1901, of Edward C. Walthall, Democrat, deceased, whose seat is occupied temporarily by William Van Amberg Sullivan, Democrat, by appointment of the Governor.

Nebraska will elect judge of the Supreme Court and two regents of the State University. For these the Democrats, Populists and silver Republicans have nominated a fusion ticket. The Republicans are to nominate Sept. 21.

New Jersey will elect part of its Legislature.

South Dakota will elect Chief Justice and two associate justices, for which thus far the Republicans alone have made nominations.

Virginia will elect a Legislature which will choose a United States Senator to succeed Thomas S. Martin, Democrat, whose term will expire March 4, 1901.

AGED CASHIER IS ATTACKED:

Murderously Assaulted in a Palatine, Ill., Bank by Supposed Robber.

Cashier Fred J. Filbert of Charles H. Patten's bank at Palatine, Ill., was beaten with a hammer in the hands of a man whose purpose is thought to have been robbery, Wednesday afternoon. The assault occurred in the bank. Filbert's skull was crushed by two blows. The assailant, who claims his name is Walter Lawton and is 32 years of age, was prevented from carrying out his supposed plan to rob the bank by Henry Plagge, an aged farmer, who entered the place immediately after the cashier's bleeding body had been thrown under a desk. Lawton struck him on the head with the hammer repeatedly, but the aged man fought for his life. Plagge wrenched the hammer from his antagonist's hand and the stranger than drew a revolver. In the struggle between the two men for this weapon it was discharged and Lawton was shot in the abdomen.

Lawton was then seized by townspeople who had heard the sounds of the struggle and the cries of the wounded men. He told the village authorities that he had come to take the life of the bank cashier because he had broken up his (Lawton's) home in New York five years ago. The townspeople do not believe this story, as it is well known that Mr. Filbert has not been in New York within twenty-five years. Lawton was taken to a Chicago hospital, being hastened out of the village by the authorities on account of the threats of summary punishment made by enraged citizens, and there he died.

DEWEY'S HOT WORDS.

Told German Admiral We Were Ready to Fight the World.

In a letter from Nice to the Chicago Record, Jos. L. Stickney gives Admiral Dewey's account of the incident with Admiral Von Diederichs in Manila bay. Admiral Dewey is quoted as saying:

"Admiral Von Diederichs sent his flag lieutenant to me with a list of complaints that he wished to make against the way I treated the ships under his command. They had exhausted my patience. I had been forbearing in the extreme, and this protest of complaint was too much. The German officer who brought the message was on the afterdeck, and when I read it I stepped to the door of my cabin. He came to meet me and stood in the doorway. As nearly as I can remember my exact words were: 'What is it you want? Do you want war? You know what that means. If you do you can have it in five minutes. We are a peaceable people, but we have got into a fight now and we are ready to go on. If necessary we are ready to fight the world. You may tell Admiral Diederichs that I am blockading this bay, and that I shall take such steps as are the right and the duty of the blockading officer.'"

TO FIGHT THE TRUSTS

CONFERENCE RESULTS IN FORMING NATIONAL BODY.

Call for a Convention Will Be Issued Shortly, Pending Organization All Over the Country—Closing of the Big Meeting in Chicago.

As the result of the trust conference in Chicago a new anti-trust organization, national in scope, has been formed. The object of the organization is the crystallization of the anti-trust spirit throughout the country, which the promoters assert has been greatly strengthened by the deliberations of the convention. The meeting was attended by many of the delegates to the conference who believe the time is ripe for the formation of a body whose strength shall eventually overthrow oppressive capitalistic combinations. With that object in view a huge anti-trust conference is to be called in the near future, the date and place of meeting to be arranged by an executive committee which has the matter in charge.

Fifteen addresses were listened to by the delegates to the conference on the second day of its session. Many additional delegates were present at the conference, whole delegations having come from some States, and an increasing interest in the problems and the means of utilizing the suggestions made about them for the public good was manifested. After deciding in the morning to have a special committee to receive and consider resolutions concerning trusts, effects of the tariff in causing the growth of trusts were considered. In the afternoon the conference listened to several accounts of the industrial situation from the farmers' point of view, and also to an anarchist's solution of the truts problem. The evening meeting was the liveliest and most exciting yet held. Enemies and advocates of trusts followed each other in quick succession, making all of them strong assertions of their confidence in their positions. The day had many humorous moments, both during the debates and while the papers were being read, and the attendance on the part of the Chicago public was larger at each successive session.

Bourke Cockran was the speaker at the third day's session, whose address was most eagerly listened to. What he would say for himself, and what for the New York delegation, of which he is perhaps the most prominent member, had been speculated upon since the opening of the convention. The evening program was changed by the omission of Mr. Bryan's address, and a great audience which had gathered in part to hear that leader was disappointed by being informed that the Democratic leader was to talk Saturday morning. The session of the conference Friday morning was devoted in the main to the addresses of labor advocates, among whom Gompers, White and Garland were most prominent. Many speeches denunciatory or approving in tone were made upon the trust problem in the afternoon, and one or two new proposals for remedial legislation were brought out.

W. J. Bryan Talks.

William J. Bryan spoke at the trust conference for nearly two hours in the morning session Saturday, and the galleries, packed an hour before he spoke and attentive and enthusiastic while he talked, emptied themselves when the Nebraskan had taken his seat again among the delegates. The audience was with Mr. Bryan before he rose. The galleries went wild over his periods and shouted and stamped and applauded all his striking sentiments. At the conclusion of the address Mr. Bryan grasped an outstretched hand here and there and made his way to a seat, only to arise twice in acknowledgment of the prolonged cheering.

As Bryan had been the striking feature of the morning session, there was another and similar scene in the afternoon and final session, when he and Bourke Cockran were plunged into a debate on the platform, where the evening before Mr. Bryan had explained that it was agreed to be not in keeping with the character of the conference for them to debate. Nevertheless that was what happened after the general discussion of the final afternoon had gotten into full swing. There was no interruption for Mr. Bryan save that which came from applause and brief and indistinct interpolations. But with Mr. Cockran it was different from beginning to end. Thomas J. Morgan and others wanted to start a mixed debate and partially succeeded. Finally the New York man was led into a continuous closing argument with a peroration that took the auditors fairly off their feet.

CHASING THE NEGROES OUT.

Towns in Texas and Louisiana Drive Them to New Orleans.

The recent outbreak against the negroes of Orange, Texas, just across the Sabine river from Louisiana, is only a repetition of similar outbreaks that have occurred in the black belt of eastern Texas and southwestern Louisiana during the last few years, and which will make itself felt in the next census. Through all this region, almost as great as New York, the negro is being rapidly driven back and is taking refuge in the larger towns, particularly in New Orleans. When the white men of a town desire to get rid of the blacks, notices are posted on the mills warning the employers not to hire negroes. This means fire for the mills if the notice is not complied with, and as a result the negroes find themselves unable to get work. When they cannot support themselves they are driven from the town. In consequence all the coast counties of Texas and Louisiana have been growing steadily whiter by the departure of the negroes and the coming in of whites.

The consequence of the emigration of the negro from the rural districts is to drive them into the towns, and particularly into New Orleans, where there has been an extraordinarily large increase of blacks. The census will show an increase of from 40 to 50 per cent in the decade, in spite of the excessive mortality, running up to 36 in 1,000 in a year.

USED DEATH AS A REMEDY.

Physician Declares He Has Killed Suffering Patients.

Dr. Nehemiah Nickerson of Meridian, Conn., has created a sensation by declaring that he had put an end to the suffering of patients who were ill beyond hope of recovery by administering chloroform, thereby causing a peaceful and more speedy death.

"There is no reason," Dr. Nickerson said, "why the sufferer should not be given chloroform if he requests such action and be assisted to pass out. I have administered chloroform under such conditions, and have always thought that I was doing a humane act. Why a person should be obliged to suffer by the aid of medical skill is more than I can see. According to my mind a person has a perfect right to say what shall be done with his life. He may live or die. Suicide is justifiable in many cases, provided the suicide has no obligations. I do not believe a doctor should hasten a patient's death without full consent of all near relatives and the patient himself."

THE OLD WEDDING RING.

It was made, they said, from guinea gold,
Poor little ring, so frail and old;
It is worn to a thread, for ah! it has known
A world of love, and regrets outgrown.

As I look at the ring, so fragile, so frail,
That shines on my hand while I whisper my tale,
I stoop, the delicate thread to kiss,
For it breathes anew of its lived-out bliss.

And could I go back to the years that have passed,
With the tender look that she wore to the last,
My grandmother's face, uprising fair,
Would smile, as if list'ning to love's sweet prayer.

By the ocean she lived, and loved, and wed,
And beside it her first glad vows were said,
While mid chorus of billows that singing broke,
It was there the voice of her fortune spoke.

Ah! well!—she vanished a long time ago;
She had joys and regrets that we all must know,
But she rests with her lover, in changeless repose,
And perchance remembers it all. Who knows?
—Philadelphia Inquirer.

THE Rowland boys were the terror of all the other residents in the big city apartment building to which they had lately been transplanted from the country. But for the fact that Mr. Rowland was part owner of the Boylstan Flats his sons would not have been tolerated in them for an instant.

Not that either Teddy or Oliver intended to be troublesome to those around them; they were merely two active, healthy boys, accustomed to fields, woods and the open country, rather than prim corridors, spotless marble stair cases, and never a place to play.

The sultry August day upon which the crowning incident of their city experiences happened was so rainy that the daily trip to the park was given up. So the boys amused themselves as best they could; teased the elevator man until he drove them from the elevator, and told them to keep out for a week, played "hunter" with every pet cat in the building, and finished by throwing their caps down the open space in the center of the curved stairway, sliding madly down the polished iron rail in order to recover them, and tramping noisily up again. They were making great fun this way when Mrs. Rowland, passing along the corridor on her way to call on Mrs. Browning, who lived on the second floor, appeared.

"A DESPERATE LUNGE."

"Oh, boys, boys," she cried, laughingly stopping her ears as they raced toward her, "you must, you positively must, be a little quieter! Go into your own rooms, dearies, and don't come out again until I return."

Ten minutes later she was nearly frightened out of her wits. Looking out of Mrs. Browning's window into the light shaft, which furnished light and air to all the apartments in the building, she saw her son Teddy suspended in a sort of improvised sling, evidently patterned after the harness used by the janitor when cleaning windows, and helped out by suggestions obtained from a traveling acrobat whom the boys had recently seen. A large bow knot had been tied in the rope used for hanging out clothes on the roof on washing days, and in the lower loop of this bow Teddy rested as if in a seatless swing; the smaller loop, passing around his waist, assisted him in retaining an unsteady sitting posture. At a small pantry window high above, alternately raising and lowering his brother, by means of an improvised windlass strangely resembling a mutilated clothes wringer, stood Oliver, grinning with delight.

Teddy, to his indignant disgust, was unceremoniously hauled through Mrs. Browning's window, and his mother, accompanied by her hostess and Mrs. Stacey, who lived upon the seventh floor of the building on the opposite side, and who had called to return a book loaned her by Mrs. Browning, hurried upstairs to look at the ingenious contrivance.

"Please, mamma, let it stay," pleaded Teddy, beseechingly; "just for a little while, any way; it might come in handy, you know."

"Oh, yes, it might," admitted Mrs. Rowland, laughing, "but I don't think it will. So remove it at once." At that moment Mrs. Stacey, who had been amusedly inspecting the rope and wringer, gave a startled cry.

Six floors below them, swaying about on the window sill of the Stacey apartment, sat the year-old baby that Mrs. Stacey had left asleep in its cradle. It was peering down into the court. A chair drawn up close to the window showed the means by which the little one had reached its dangerous perch. The floor of the light shaft was paved with stone, the window was unguarded by bars or railing, and the poor mother groaned aloud as she realized that her child might at any moment fall and be dashed to death.

"What shall I do? What shall I do?" she moaned wildly, wringing her hands. "I let the nurse go upon an errand half an hour ago, the girl has her afternoon off to-day, and I've locked myself out of the flat. I forgot all about there being nobody to let me in, and my latch key is in my pocket back down on the dresser in my bedroom!"

"And the janitor has gone out, too; I saw him, and he said he was going down town!" put in Oliver, excitedly.

"And the engineer hasn't any keys, for I asked him yesterday when I did the same thing," exclaimed Mrs. Browning, sympathetically.

Mrs. Stacey stood as if paralyzed. When she would have called to the baby, creeping steadily across the broad window sill, Mrs. Rowland restrained her. To startle the child would almost certainly make it lose its balance and fall.

"Unwind me down!" directed Teddy suddenly, once more adjusting the ropes of the cherished swing about his body. A moment later he was twirling rapidly toward the child.

His face was a little pale and set, for to seize the child meant to take both hands from the rope, and Teddy, while privately entertaining great hopes of some time swinging up and down the shaft in triumph, holding on to the rope by his teeth, still felt dizzy at the thought of trusting to the rope around his waist alone. But when on a level with the baby he set his jaw firmly, signaled Oliver to hold the rope as steadily as possible, and kicked vigorously against the wall beside which he hung in order to swing his body across the court.

Twice he failed to reach the window opposite him, and the baby, interested in the floor of the court, did not look up. The third time he approached her she saw him and crowed with delight, stretching out her baby hands toward him and trying to rise to her unsteady little feet. But Teddy was swifter than she.

With a desperate lunge he flung himself against the window sill, let go his hold of the rope and snatched the child just as she tottered on the slippery edge of the polished stone. The sudden and violent movement, combined with the jerky action of the rope, which swung sharply across the court again on the rebound, upset his balance completely. The eager spectators at the window high above, their hearts still thumping wildly from the excitement of the baby's danger, gasped with apprehension as the boy, firmly clutching the baby, fell heavily backward, slipping out of the loop on which he rested entirely, and dropping to a horizontal posture.

But Teddy was game. "Wind me up—quick!" he shouted to Oliver, and up he came, with only the loop around his waist to keep both him and his charge from the stone floor below. The baby, who fancied the whole affair a new kind of play, kicked, crowed and squirmed in his arms. But the loop held firm. Teddy managed, after a few efforts, to catch hold of the other loop with his feet, and presently he was being drawn in through the Rowland window, red in the face and breathless from the partially inverted position in which the upward trip had been made. Mrs. Stacey snatched her baby and fell to wildly kissing it, and the other ladies hugged Teddy, in spite of his objections.

"I'm all right, mamma; indeed I am!" he cried, wriggling away from his mother's affectionate embrace, "and you needn't cry, I'm sure. My jacket split when the rope slipped, but you can mend it, I know, and we won't ask you to let us keep the swing now, if you feel so badly about it. But I told you it might come in handy. And say, mamma! Can't I have a piece of jelly cake?"

"I'm hungry, too," remarked Oliver, plaintively, "and, really, mamma, I was the one who first thought of fixing up the ropes like that, and I've done most of the work, anyway. Can't I have some jelly cake, too?"

Before Mrs. Rowland had time to answer Mrs. Browning was trying to kiss both boys at once, and laughing heartily as she did so.

"You dear, funny, blessed little anbels!" she exclaimed, drawing them out into the corridor and downstairs with her, "I've got a great, big, lovely jelly cake in my pantry, and I'm going to make you eat every bit of it!"

Teddy and Oliver, being simple, natural, jolly urchins, said not a word to any one about the afternoon's doings, but the story spread through all the building, and they have had many champions since that time. True, as they have become more accustomed to city life, they have grown less noisy and boisterous, but the other occupants of the Boylstan Flats are far more gentle in their judgment of them than of old, and it is doubtful if Mrs. Stacey could ever again bring herself to the point of calling Teddy a "dreadful boy," even should he chased her pet cat as often as he caught sight of that interesting animal.—Chicago Record.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.

The Head of the Famous Family Who Died Recently.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, head of the great family of railroad magnates, died suddenly at his residence on West Fifty-seventh street, New York. He was the eldest son of William H. Vanderbilt and was born on Staten Island, N. Y., Nov. 27, 1843. He received an academic education and a business training in bank and railroad offices. Since 1867 he had been an official in various railroads, and at the death of his father became the head of one of the greatest railroad systems in the world. Until recently he headed the directorate of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad and Harlem, Michigan Central and other roads. Because of failing health his place as chairman of these boards was taken recently by Chauncey M. Depew as representative of the large Vanderbilt interests. His fortune, consisting of the controlling interest in the New York Central, Chicago and Northwestern, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Michigan Central, Ontario and Western, New York, Chicago and St. Louis and other railroads; the Wagner Palace Car Company and at least $40,000,000 in United States bonds, is estimated at not less than $100,000,000.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., the eldest son, is now the head of the house. It is not known yet whether his father in his displeasure over his marriage has cut him off with only a few millions, or whether the second son, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, now on a tour of the world, comes into the greater part of the immense fortune. The third son, Reginald, is living, and there are two daughters, Gertrude, married to Harry Payne Whitney, and Gladys, who recently made her debut in society.

There was nothing showy about Mr. Vanderbilt. He dressed simply and with modest taste. He was an elder in St. Bartholomew's Church and very charitable, his gifts amounting to half a million yearly.

OLD WAUKEGAN LIGHTHOUSE.

The One Which Was First Established Back in 1849.

The extinguishment of the lamp in the old lighthouse at Waukegan marked another step in the history of that port. The lighthouse was established in 1849 and was rebuilt in 1860. In earlier years, when there was much shipping carried on from piers, the light was of great local value aside from its use as a coast light. This new light, which is of the fourth order and much more powerful than the old one, is both a coast and harbor light.

The location of the light so far back from the water's edge was responsible for at least one beaching over twenty years ago, when lumber was received at a pier in front of the lighthouse. The captain of a small schooner coming over from Michigan with a load was told he could sail up and knock at the lighthouse door. Arriving at Waukegan late at night, he tried to do this, but found himself beached, with the light still afar off. When morning came the townspeople saw the schooner high and dry and were hilarious when they learned how it had happened. The lumber was unloaded and the schooner, scarcely hurt, was launched again. John Williams, a one-armed veteran of the civil war, kept the light from 1865 until his death thirty years later.

To a Horseless Carriage.

Smooth, sleek and oiliest of wheeling things,
I cannot find in my imaginings,
In natural or in supernatural ways,
The slightest reason to prolong thy days.

Of all the vain conceptions of the mind
Thou art the vainest that the ages find,
Except for those whose blood doth chance to flow
In dull and melancholy-wise, and slow.

What is the joy of driving? Is it mere
Transportment of the flesh from there to here?
A method whereby sluggish man may be Removed from A to Izzard speedily?

Or is it pleasant for the eye to view,
And hand to master steeds, or one or two,
When prancing o'er the hard and well-paved street,
With champing bits, and lithe limbs running fleet?

Avaunt! thou horridest of modern things!
Vamoose! Unto thy ugly self take wings!
Think not with all thy gaud and glitter coarse
Thou'lt e'er supplant that best of friends, the horse.

Youthful Dagger Wielders.

The art of self-defense is inculcated early among some of the wilder tribes of the Caucasus, who instruct their children, as soon as they can walk, in the use of the dagger. First, the little ones are taught to stab water without making a splash, and, in the course of time, incessant practice gives them an extraordinary command over the weapon.

Women Goldsmiths.

An interesting commission has been given by the French government to a lady art worker in gold for a necklace designed as a gift to the Empress of Russia. It consists of twelve medallions in gold, each bearing the portrait of a French woman celebrated in political, literary or social history. The series begins with the first Christian Queen of France and ends prior to the great revolution. The art work of the goldsmith was declared at the recent woman's congress in London to be peculiarly suitable for women.

CHARLES A. PILLSBURY.

Career of One of the Most Prominent Men of Minnesota.

Charles Alfred Pillsbury, one of the leading men of the Northwest and conspicuous as one of the founders of the flouring mills center in Minneapolis, died at his residence in Minneapolis not long ago of heart disease.

Charles Alfred Pillsbury was born at Warner, Merrimac County, N. H., Oct. 3, 1842. He graduated from Dartmouth College at the age of 21, having partly supported himself by teaching. For six years later he engaged in mercantile pursuits in Montreal, and Sept. 12, 1866, he married Miss Mary A. Stinson, Goffstown, N. H.

After coming to Minneapolis in 1869 Mr. Pillsbury bought an interest in a small flour mill at St. Anthony's Falls. His father, George A. Pillsbury; his uncle, John S. Pillsbury, and brother, F. C. Pillsbury, were admitted to the firm, which continued as Charles A. Pillsbury & Co. until the acquisition of the property by the English syndicate in 1890. New mills were added to the original, and a system of elevators was purchased in connection with the mills. His "A" mill, capacity 7,000 barrels a day, is said to be the largest and best mill in the world. In 1890 Mr. Pillsbury retired from the conduct of his vast milling interests, though he remained as the manager of the property for some time. The only public office he ever held was that of State Senator.

Out of Order.

While the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church was sitting in New York, a quaint-looking old man, with a broad-brimmed, round-crowned hat in his hand, walked calmly up the aisle to the President's seat, bowing as he came.

"Mr. President," he said, "I want to talk."

Nobody knew the speaker, and the President asked, "Are you a member of this body, sir?"

"No, sir," replied the old gentleman, "but I want to talk."

The President reminded him that none but members had a right to speak, but an aged minister who had just come in recognized the would-be talker, and said, "I move that the Rev. Elias Van Benschooten have leave to talk."

The motion was carried, and the old man went up to the President's table and drew from his pocket a roll of bank-bills. These he counted—eight hundred dollars in all. Then he drew out another package of securities amounting to thirteen thousand eight hundred and forty dollars, and counted them out, afterward, in a few well-chosen words, presenting the whole sum to the Synod for educational purposes.

It was the first endowment made in the Dutch Reformed Church for theological education. The old gentleman's speech was certainly out of order, but everybody felt that it was distinctly a speech in the right place.—Christian Work.

GEN. P. J. JOUBERT.

Boer Commander the Most Celebrated Fighter in South Africa.

While Oom Paul Kruger is the head of the Boer republic, the military chief is General P. J. Joubert, the man who carries out what Kruger plans. Joubert is the most celebrated fighter in South Africa. He is the commander-in-chief of the Boer army, and is looked on as the country's savior in the event of war being declared by the English. The General is 68 years old now, and scarred by many a wound from English bullet and native assegai. Yet he is sturdy of frame and keen of eye, and withal crafty as a North American Indian. He led the Boers at Majuba Hill, where 280 English gave up their lives, General Joubert losing but five men. He beat the English at Laings Nek, commanded the forces at Bronkhorst and Spruit, and finally caught Jameson like a rat in a trap through quick mobilization of troops and superior marksmanship.

A Spanish Historian.

Senor Pi y Margal, who surprised the Spanish Cortes by holding up the United States as an example to be followed by Spain, is, strangely enough, one of the leading authorities on United States history. He has written a history of the United States in two large volumes, and his library, which is perhaps the finest in Madrid, consists largely of works on the same subject. For ten years he has read little except documents and books dealing with the early history of the American continent. It is his ambition to write the standard work on this subject.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..SEPTEMBER 28, 1899.

Loved Turkey.

As the holiday season comes in sight the love of turkey springs up unbidden in the hoosier stomach. Two DeKalb men are under $200 bonds to appear before his honor, 'Squire Treesh tomorrow Tuesday morning, and answer a charge of loving too well but not wisely, the great American bird.

Geo. R. Driver of Jackson township has been missing turkeys for some time, and in order to protect the rest of his flock, he went to Garrett Saturday and procured a good gun and a cross dog! Saturday night near midnight, his daughter heard trouble among the turkeys, and saw two men knocking them off the fence. Driver got up, got his gun and the big dog and started out. In a short distance he overtook a man named Beaty and also nearby, a couple of turkeys with their throats cut. Beaty declared he had nothing to do with the turkey, but Driver says he saw Beaty carrying them off. So Driver and his wife drove to Auburn the same night getting here about 2 a. m. and swore out a warrant before 'Squire John Treesh, charging Samuel Beaty and "John Doe" with the theft, for he did not know who the other man was. Sunday forenoon, Sheriff Hathaway and Marshal Hilkey went out and arrested Beaty, and also a brother-in-law of his named Donaldson. Both were put under $200 bonds to appear before 'Squire Treesh tomorrow, Tuesday forenoon for trial.

A Surprise.

At about 8:30 p. m. Saturday, Sept. 23, a number of young people gathered at the home of Mr. Adam Heitz, two miles south of New Era, and surprised his oldest son, Willie, who soon starts to Adrian college to study for the ministry. As Willie is to start on Monday following, a few of his relatives came in and were busy singing while the unexpected crowd came in so quietly that Willie, on his looking around, seemed somewhat embarassed to think that he was singing to so large an audience.

All feeling that the surprise was a success began to spend the fore part of the evening in lively games of different sorts until all was quieted and Willie was called to enter the parlor when he was met at the door by his cousin, C. W. Heitz, who presented to him, in behalf of his friends, a fountain pen and in behalf of his father and mother a picture framed, which he prized very highly. Again all were busy having a good time, when supper was announced. After a nice lap supper had been served and just before going home the time was spent in singing. All went away as if a good time was had.

It seemed to be the sentiment of all as they left, "We bid you God speed in your work and hope some day to hear from you." About forty-five were present.

In Bad Luck.

A dispatch from Winamac, Ind., gives an extreme case of the bad luck that will sometimes happen to the shrewdest farmer. It says:

John Waldersmith, a farmer of this county, hauled a load of corn to this place and refused 29 cents per bushel for it. He then went to Kewaune, sixteen miles, and refused 28½ cents. From there he went to Monterey, sixteen miles, and would not take 28 cents. He was out three days' time and hotel expenses. He then drove over to Knox thirty-six miles, and sold his corn for 27½ cents, which brought him $8.40. When he reached home he had traveled 133 miles and was out five days' time and $2.

Trust Prices.

(Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette.)

At a special meeting of the Northwestern plow and implement combine, held in Chicago, Monday, it was decided to increase the price of plows and kindred farm implements 25 per cent, the second advance since July, and another meeting will be held October 31, to make a further advance, keeping pace with the market price of iron and steel. Forty-one manufacturers were represented. This will be cheering news to the tillers of the soil, who must settle the prosperity bill of the trusts and combinations.

AWFUL EXPLOSION

At the Band Sawmill in Which Wallace Shutt is Killed.

FOUR OTHERS BADLY HURT,

One of Whom May Die.—Loss of Property is Several Thousand Dollars.—Narrow Escapes from Death.

One of the most terrible accidents it has ever been necessary for the COURIER to record occurred in this city this morning and as a result one man lies dead—crushed into an almost shapeless mass of flesh and bones—and at least three others are badly injured, one of whom may not recover.

About 6:30 o'clock a heavy shock was heard all over town and the shaking of buildings and rattling of windows told in a way not to be mistaken that an explosion of more than ordinary character had taken place. In a few moments it was learned that the scene of the accident was the big band sawmills, east of the Wabash depot, established some years ago by Nickey & Gandy and now owned and operated by the Hardwood Company, by whom it was purchased from V. L. DeWitt early last spring. As usual in such cases rumors began flying thick and fast as to the great loss of life and hundreds of people hurried to the mill, some anxiously looking for near relatives who were known to be employed there, others to render any assistance that might be needed, and many more through curiosity. The scene that met their gaze was almost indescribable. The boiler and engine room, located at the south side of the mill proper, was completely demolished, not a piece of timber being left standing. The big boiler was torn to pieces as though made of paper and the machinery in the engine room bent and twisted out of all resemblance to its original appearance. All over the mill yard and in the streets, alleys and lots for some distance around were pieces of the debris, while the main building was badly shattered, especially on the south side.

As soon as the nature of the catastrophe was realized willing hands set to work rescuing and caring for the injured men. Engineer William Richmond was one of the first picked up and it was at once seen that he was terribly injured, being bruised and scalded in such a manner that his removal was attended with great pain. He was placed upon a stretcher and taken to his home on Cedar street. Fred Gouli, who was employed as a stacker in the yards, was picked up a short distance away from the mill and was also found to be badly injured. Mr. Gouli had just started through the yards. When the explosion occurred a team used in hauling wood became frightened, ran away knocking Mr. Gouli down, the heavy wagon passing over his body and limbs. He was carried to his home just north of the elevators where it was found that several ribs were broken and that he had received other serious injuries. George Kiester, employed about the mill, started to run when he heard the first warning of danger, but had gone only a few feet when he was struck by a flying piece of timber. When picked up it was found that his right leg was broken just above the knee and he was badly cut in several places. He was taken to the residence of Eck Guilford where he made his home. Connie Wolf was also one of the unfortunate employes, being badly cut about the face. He was able to come up town at once, however, and have his wounds dressed, and his injuries will probably not prove serious

The most shocking discovery was made, howere, when the dead body of Wallace Shutt, so horribly crushed as to be almost unrecognizable, was found lying near the engine almost entirely covered with broken timbers, brick and other debris. The sight was one to shock the stoutest heart and was made even more touching when Mrs. Shutt, who had heard of the accident, arrived in search of her husband. Bystanders persuaded her to return home and the remains of her unfortunate husband were carried out of the yards and to the Wabash depot where they were placed in the freight room to await the arrival of an undertaker. After being made as presentable as possible under the circumstances the body was taken to the home on Cedar street, which the dead man had left but a few hours before.

Of course all sorts of rumors were afloat and various opinions advanced as to the cause of the explosion. Whether it occurred through lack of water in the boiler or from some other of the various causes leading up to such accidents will probably never be definitely known. The particulars of the affair, as near as we can learn them from those who were at the mill when the explosion occurred, are as follows:

Engineer Richmond had just prepared to start the machinery and several of the employes who had been standing about the engine room had gone out into the mill and yard to begin the day's work, when three short blasts of the whistle were heard, a signal to the headsawyer, George Rudolph to start the big wheel at the saw The latter stepped from his post at the lever operating the carriage and a few seconds later an awful crash came The air was filled with flying timbers and a dense cloud af steam obscured the view of those about the mill for several minutes. A heavy piece of timber strck the lever at which Rudolph had been standing; breaking it as one would a pipe-stem, showing his miraculous escape from almost certain death. Other employes standing near by were equally fortunate, though, as one of them expressed it, they thought the entire plant was being blown to atoms It was several moments before they could realize what had happened and all set to work to assist their less fortunate comrades.

Shutt was evidently just leaving the engine room when the explosion occurred, his body being found a few feet from the engine and near the entrance to the main building. He was first noticed by a young lady standing near, whose cries attracted others to the spot. He was evidently killed instantly.

No accident ever occurred in Auburn that has caused more excitement and it is made all the more terrible by the loss of life involved. The financial loss, which is of course quite heavy, is as nothing compared to the death of one and possibly two men and the sufferings of others, with the attendant grief of those depending upon these men for support. Had the explosion occurred a few moments sooner, the loss of life would have been much greater.

NOTES.

The team which ran away in the yard landed in a pile of logs from which they were extricated more frightened than hurt.

Guy Baker picked up a bolt from the boiler, on Main street, near the south end grocery. The COURIER office has a pipe that was picked up on Cedar street.

We have not heard any estimate of the amount of loss to the Hardwood Company, but it will probably reach several thousand dollars. The mill will doubtless be rebuilt at once.

Those who witnessed the blowing up of the boiler from a distance say the sight was one never to be forgotten. It seemed as though the air was filled with flying missiles, and many expressed a wonder that no one outside the mill yard was injured.

Late reports from Engineer Richmond say that his case is very serious and there is small hope of his recovery. The other injured men are doing as well as can be expected and will doubtless recover. Everything possible is being done for their comfort.

Wallace Shutt was a son of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Shutt of Jackson township, but had for some time been a resident of Auburn, living with his wife and one child in one of Wash. Link's houses on south Cedar street. He was at one time employed by Morr & Mutzfield, the draymen. We have not yet learned the time and place of th funeral.

Pieces of timber and brick, sections of steam pipe and other debris were found a long distance from the scene Incredible as it may seem, part of a brick landed on the roof James McClellan's residence in East Auburn, more than a half mile away. Whole brick were found partially imbedded in the earth at other points almost as far disdast, and twisted and broken pieces of pipe several blocks away from the mill.

I. M. Zent had the rare experience of seeing the explosion. This is something we do not remember of hearing in these cases. They come without warning and are over in a breath. Mr. Zent was standing on the platform at the Wabash station and happened to be looking directly at the mill. There was a puff, an explosion, heavy and dull, and the steam, smoke and wreckage flew up in the air going in all directions and falling far and near. He said it was a magnificent sight, but he realized at once what it meant, and hurried over there, and a terrible sight met his eyes.

OUT IN THE FIELD

Out in the field where the buttercups grow,
And down by the side of a brook,
I used to, in days, that are gone long ago,
Experience the sweetest content
It was not because I had many good friends,
It was not be because I had wealth
But because my dear Savior would speak to me there
My dear one, believe and repent.

And now when I sit in my soft easy chair
And think of the days that are past,
I see just how many that lived at that time
Have crossed over the river at last.

Oh for a home where friends do not part
And forever, together may sing;
I wonder and wonder why not everyone
Will accept the dear Savior and King.

I sometimes think there is nothing so sweet,
As to dream of the evergreen shore,
There Christians for ages together will meet.
And the angels will open the door.

Yes, there's rest for God's children beyond the blue sky
Yet often we are chastised and then we ask, why?
Oh Father in Heaven! we ask for that love,
That only can come to us, down from above.

Goldwin Smith, a prominent writer in Canada, says Dewey did no great thing after all, in destroying the Spanish fleet at Manila He says it was no such terrible fight as the great sea battles the English won at Aboukir, Copenhagen and Trafalgar, and that the cost of life on the American side was small. All this we grant is true as far as loss of life was concerned. But if Admiral Nelson could have won those battles at as small a loss of life as Dewey won his, why did he not do it. A man who can win decisive battles with small loss of life, is surely a greater commander, than he who throws away the lives of his men. We stand for Dewey in spite of what Goldwin Smith may say, or what Nelson did. All we ask of Smith is to be careful and not hurt Dewey.

Admiral Dewey and his good ship Olympia, reached New York yesterday morning, a day or more sooner than expected. This was owing to the warship's good sailing qualities and the skill of officers and crew. He says he is glad to be home after an absence of twenty-three months spent on shipboard. He was surprised to see the signs of the great welcome that is to be given him tomorrow, Thursday. He has on board 375 men of whom eleven are convalescing from typhoid fever; none have died. He brought his ship to anchor in the lower bay, but will today anchor with the rest of the fleet in the inside harbor with the rest of the North Atlantic warships, of which squadron he is now the superior officer. Admiral Sampson, and other distinguished officers have already called on him, and foreign ships are as enthusiastic as our own in giving him a welcome home.

You go home and ask your wife to forgive you. On the way home stop at Davenport's Drug store and buy a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin; take it according to directions, and if you can't eat anything in less than a week from biled cabbage up, come up o me, and I will give you a divorce and alimony both."

The robber drew a revolver and both fought to get it. It was in some way discharged and hit the robber himself in the stomach. He weakened enough so the old farmer held him down till help came. —Mrs. Cora Belle Smith and little son of Quincy, Mich., came today for a few days visit with her aunt, Mrs. Lydia Beber.

—Dr. Broughton of Waterloo is taking steps to have a hospital at that place. He believes it would pay, and also be a great advantage to many classes of patients.

—Mrs. Nora Engel of Fort Wayne came on the evening train yesterday, and will be a guest for a few days of the COURIER family, who are relatives.

—Hunters should remember that the quail season does not open until November 10. So far we have heard of no one violating the law, but a warning at this time may not be out of place.

—Mrs. Clara McClellan goes to Chicago tomorrow and the Lake Shore excursion and after a week's visit with relatives there, will return on the B & O. excursion the following Sunday.

—W. H. Holdeman, the defaulting ex-treasurer of Elkhart county, will probably be given his freedom from the Michigan city prison within the next few days, on parole. His health is very poor.

—James Shefler is expecting to build in the near future, on the lot on the corner across from Matt Zerwes' house. It will be a nice location. In the meantime he will occupy the Zerwes property.

—Cucumber crop about Benton Harbor, has been mined by a small red bug from the old world. The loss is put at $100,000. Two millions of bushels of small pickles a year has been the yield for several seasons.

—Mrs. M. E. Olds went to Chicago last evening over the B. & O. Mr. Olds and little Archie will join them tomorrow and all will remain over Sunday, the guests of E. J. Coder, whose home is in that city.

—How things have changed since the rebellion. Now, the woolen mills of Knoxville, Tenn., are selling goods by the thousand in Chicago, while those of Braunfels, Texas, sell theirs into Boston and the east.

Citizens of Cumberland, Md., want their tinplate factory reopened. About 1000 men are out of employ, as the mill went into a trust and the trust ordered the mill to stop so that the output would be smaller and prices go up.

—The item we have about "the world's harvests" was furnished by L. J. Miller the veteran grain dealer. It is full of interest and will be a matter of news to many of our readers. It should be cut out and preserved.

—Mr. Ostrander of the Waterloo basket factory was here yesterday afternoon on business in his line. He occupies the old Winslow building there and says his business is good, as he can sell his baskets faster than he can make them.

—The case of Mervin Widney of Concord township, who asked for a transfer of his son to the St. Joe schools has been decided in his favor by the state superintendent. The News says the transfer was refused by the township trustee and county superintendent.

—J. F. Rohm now has charge of the rooms on the second floor of the Bradford Hotel building and will keep boarders by day, week or meal, or will rent rooms to those who desire them. With the demand we have for some time had, we hope to see him do well.

The corn carnival at Atchison, Kansas, was held this week. Yesterday was the great day, when hundreds of teams brought corn in wagons and much of it was thrown about, at one another, and in the streets, and wasted of course. It places it was ankle deep and was ground into meal by passing wagons.

—Peoria, Ill., has a cellulose factory which makes from otherwise waste cornstalks, a spongy substance that is greatly used in packing, especially to put between the armor plate of battleships, and for fuses to use with smokeless powder. Cornstalks are worth $6 a ton, and 15 tons make a ton of cellulose.

—A Noblesville girl took poison and crawled under the porch to die and all because her father would not take her to the show. The old man made a mistake, says the Muncie Herald; he should have taken his daughter to the show and if it had peeted like some on the road it would no doubt have killed the weak-minded creature.

—The old veterans of the Eleventh Indiana battery held an enjoyable reunion at Fort Wayne yesterday. About fifty of the members were present with their wives and daughters and visiting veterans of other organizations swelled the number to about three hundred. Captain John Otto of this city was re-elected president of the organization and the next reunion will be held in Fort Wayne.

—Geo. M. Ray, the agent who used to get trustees in trouble by selling them supplies they did not need, at figures three times as high as should be, has now got the commissioners of his county, Shelby, into trouble. They had let six bridges to Ray's pet builders at an enormous price, when the people found it out and got out an injunction. The result is, that but two bridges will be made, and those at fairer prices. It was a big swindle and Ray was mad because it did not succeed.

—Anderson Herald:—"Immortal J. N." was on a Panhandle train pulling into Logansport the other day, when he learned that James McCrea and party were on the same train in a special car. He gained admission to the officials' Pullman and asked Mr. McCrea to write him a perpetual pass, saying that it was much needless annoyance to have them renewed. Mr. McCrea gave him a pass over all the Pennsylvania lines with "good until doomsday," written across the face.

—A decision recently handed down by the supreme court says that a landlord can compel his tenant to come to his office and pay rent. He need not look up his tenant, but without doing so can sue and get judgment against him. A landlord telephoned his tenant in Plymouth last January and asked him to come around and pay his rent, but the tenant said "come and get it." Words passed with the result that both engaged lawyers. In has just been decided in the landlord's favor, and it costs the lessee $200 to find it out.

Saturday's Daily.

—H. C. VanBuskirk, the owner of the wrecked electric light plant at Ashley will rebuild and operate it.

—LOST:—A black belt with steel buckle. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at Culbertson & Boland's store.

—Nine new recruits left Fort Wayne yesterday for Indianapolis where they will be sworn into the service and forwarded to their regiments.

—G. S. McCord reports the death this morning of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Bryant in East Auburn The funeral was this afternoon.

—Through the omission of a cipher yesterday we inadvertently stated that the quail shooting season opens November 1. It should have read November 10.

—Geo. Himes of DeKalb was a caller today. He says he and his wife have never fully recovered from the hurts received in their runaway, though both are able to get about.

—WANTED:—Black Walnut logs for timber. Highest cash prices paid for same. Address, The Sanders & Egbert Co., Goshen, Ind. 8

—C. P. Hamman of Franklin township was here this morning. He teaches the Rakestraw school two miles west of town, but was going to Altona today, where his township is holding an institute.

—A certain well-known married man called on one of our doctors today and said he wanted some medicine for his wife. "Why, is she sick?" inquired the doctor. "I don't know," was the reply, "but when she got up this morning she failed to give me a lecture, and I'm afraid she's going to die."

—C. W. Cronmiller, the Churubusco harness dealer who was arrested some time ago on a charge of forgery, was found guilty by a jury at Columbia City yesterday and will go to prison for a term of two to fourteen years. He tried to escape on a plea of insanity, but the scheme failed to work.

—D. D. Metcalf brought in a curiosity of the fruit kind yesterday. It is an apple which the Irishman said "was born twins, only there's three of 'em." It is three small apples all grown into one. One is a double apple with two cores and a single one as large as the two grown onto it. We have often seen twin apples, but not triplets.

—In Lagrange county, the county council was obliged to appropriate $1,500 to pay interest on school funds. The law in this state requires counties to loan school funds, and in case they cannot do so the interest must be paid by the county out of the general fund. In Lagrange and many other counties it is found impossible to loan out this money, as the state has fixed the rate too high. The law should be changed

—Trustee Norris, of Liberty township, Fulton county, is the author of a new system of hiring teachers. He proposed the following plan and it was adopted in that county. Those who have never taught and hold a one year state license will be paid double the amount of their general average per day. Teachers of experience holding a one year state license will be paid double the average, plus 5 cents; those with a two years state license double the average plus ten cents; with a three years state license, double average plus thirty cents

NEW WAY OF MAKING STEEL.

It Is Cast in a Vacuum and Tempered with Liquid Hydrogen.

Just as Americans begin to feel that they are upon the verge of developing superiority to Great Britain not only in shipbuilding, but in the steel trade, in which a number of valuable foreign contracts have lately been taken by our manufacturers in the face of British competition, and just as nature seems to encourage the American aspiration by showing that the English coal mines will be exhausted within another fifty years, science seems to be coming to the aid of the Britisher and may be about to open new fields of competition in steel, in which America must take part if she is to maintain her hard earned prestige. The discovery has been demonstrated in London and is being made much of by the English press that the ability to produce perfect steel by casting it in a vacuum made by liquid hydrogen with a process that it is not proposed to make public, has at last attained practicability. A company has been formed with a capital of 30,000 pounds to experimentally develop the process, and if the plan is successful as Prof. Dewar, the discoverer, presumes it will be, the air bubbles that now cause flaws and weakness in steel will be done away with, and a metal will result such as the world has never seen. To say that this means a possible revolution in the steel trade is to put it mildly, and if the English government can control the process, as it is now intimated may be the case, then American scientists and those of other countries will be put upon their mettle to get even with the Britishers. Liquid hydrogen, which is the great agent now discovered, is described as a clear, colorless, transparent and very volatile fluid, no clearer than pure water, but only one-fourteenth the density of water. In its lightness it is out of all proportion to any known liquid. A piece of paper when placed in it sinks. The difference between liquid hydrogen and liquid air is as great if not greater than the difference between the ordinary temperature and liquid air. Liquid hydrogen places temperature at within twenty degrees of absolute zero, which is represented by 494 degrees Fahrenheit, and 273 degrees Centigrade below zero. The boiling point of liquid hydrogen is 252 degrees below zero, at which it is capable of enormous pressure. The discovery must affect every problem in physics and chemistry. Its possibilities are illimitable. It may revolutionize the methods that have been laboriously built up during the last 300 years.

Where It Rains Forever.

You can expect a shower at Panama, says a correspondent in the Chicago Record, about 3 o'clock every afternoon during the rainy season. The rest of the day and evening after 6 o'clock is delightful, and no one thinks of carrying an umbrella, but at Colon it rains all the time, and, according to the old proverb, it never rains but it pours. It is the real thing by the bucketful. It seems as if the bottom had dropped out of the sky. Colon and Panama are forty-seven miles apart. The rainfall at Panama is about ninety-two inches annually, or about eight feet. The rainfall at Colon is 250 inches annually, or about twenty-one feet, and the people get it all in five months—an average of four feet a month precipitation, while in Arizona they only have a few inches. It takes all the rest of the year for the people to get dry.

Sage Advice.

It is not often that a lawyer gives better advice, and asks no fee for it, than was once given by a certain Irish judge, who must have had both a sense of justice and a sense of humor. A turbulent peasant was a witness in a trial before Chief Baron O'Grady. The counsel, after pestering him for some time, put a question to him which reflected on the witness' character. "If ye ax me that again, I'll give ye a kick!" was the answer. The counsel appealed to the court, stating that an answer was necessary to his client's case, and ending up with the query: "What would your lordship advise me to do?" "If you are resolved to repeat the question," replied the court, "I'd advise you to move a little from the witness."

Great Feat of a Diver.

The greatest diving feat ever achieved, it is said, was in moving the cargo of the ship Cape Horn, wrecked off the coast of South America, when a diver named Hooper made seven descents of over 200 feet, remaining at one time forty-two minutes under water. An authority states that the greatest depth to which a man has been known to descend does not exceed 200 feet—which is equivalent to a pressure of eighty-eight and one-half pounds to the square inch.

Sacred Tree

In the fruiting season the banyan is an arbor for the feathered creation and a rude temple is often set up under or close to its shade, at which the wayfarer stops to cook a meal more frequently than to offer a prayer. These sacred trees, with their grateful shade, are common in every part of India, and are confined to the tropical zone. As timber they are of no value, but gualac is obtained from their juice and the bark is used by the Hindoos medicinally.

Microbes in Tobacco.

Her Suchaland, a German scientist, has discovered that the aroma of tobacco is due to microbes, and it is said he will patent, if he can, a process for making cheap cigars smell like expensive ones.

How Words Change Meanings.

Acre once meant a field of any size. The Germans still use the word in this sense. God's acre, meaning a cemetery, is an instance of the old meaning. Libel once had no reference to anything offensive, but simply meant a small book or pamphlet. But pamphlet wars, which often were nothing but printed billingsgate, changed its meaning. Jeremy Taylor refers to the "beautiful imps that sang hosannas in the temple." Imp once meant a little child, and not a child of the devil, as it does now. Preface was formerly the word of welcome to a meal. Voyages were formerly made over land as well as water. Meat was applied to any kind of food, while to starve originally meant to work one's self to death—a significant footnote to the history of peasant risings in the early days.

The Queen's Garb.

The queen is simply attired in a black dress, not always of silk, and wears a widow's cap, her silver hair plainly brushed on either side of her temples. Upon her fingers are plain memorial rings, and she invariably wears a bracelet having the portrait of her latest grandchild or great-grandchild placed in it as a medallion. The queen always has a handkerchief bordered with lace resting in her hands as they lie folded in her lap, the survival of an ancient fashion.

Work of a Legal Aid Association.

Since the foundation of the Legal Aid association in New York 90,000 people, victimized by their fellows, have sought and found justice through its efforts. The society has collected and paid over to its clients a sum largely in excess of $700,000. The indirect benefits have also been felt by a far larger number of people.

The Hottest Region.

The hottest region on earth is in the southeastern part of Persia, where it borders the gulf. For forty consecutive days in July and August the temperature has been known not to fall lower than 100 degrees, day or night.

FIRST POTATOES.

Tomatoes and Chincon Trees Were Raised in Peru.

Lima Cor. Chicago Record: Peru is the birthplace of the potato, which was first used as an article of food by the Incas and exported to Europe by the Spaniards when they took over quinine bark and named it in honor of the countess of Chincon, whose husband at that time was viceroy. The Indians had used the bark for medicinal purposes as long as any one could remember, but this noble lady was the first European to test its efficacy, and it proved so excellent a cure for the malaria which saturates the atmosphere of Lima that she induced the Jesuit fathers to recommend it to the medicos of the old world. These wise old chaps sent it to Spain and Italy, and it is said that one of the first doses of quinine that was ever administered in Europe was swallowed by the pope. The unregenerate potato, which is still found in a wild state among the mountains of Peru, is a delicate vine, which bears a fruit about the size of a plum and as yellow as an orange. Cultivation has increased its size and improved its flavor. The scientists say that the tomato also originated in Peru, and was known among the Incas as a love apple, possessing peculiar qualities that influenced the affections. For centuries after its discovery the same superstition prevailed in Europe. Peru also claims to be the mother of cotton, but I think Egypt will dispute that fact.

Chickens Vary in Size.

All chickens do not grow equally well. A hatch from an incubator, if all of the same breed and strain, usually do not grow equally. This cannot be explained precisely.

"There's Luck in Odd Numbers."

The Siamese have so strong a superstition against even numbers that they will have none of them. The number of rooms in a house, of windows or doors in a room, even of rungs on a ladder, must always be odd.

BOON FOR THOSE DEMENTED.

Newly Invented Strait-Jacket That Will Save Much Suffering.

From Washington Times: J. M. Hooper of Baltimore applied for patent papers on an invention that promises to be of incalculable assistance to hospitals and public and private asylums where insane, delirious or unruly patients are handled. The invention is known as a rest sheet and strait jacket and is a combination of both, holding the patient securely and comfortably without even the aid of an attendant. All the hospitals have felt the need of just such an invention as has been perfected by Mr. Hooper, and hospital attendants in general will hail with delight the advent of the sheet and jacket that will save both many struggles with a wild sufferer and in many cases personal injury of some sort to either the patient or the nurse. The patent is especially to protect insane or delirious patients, and can be adjusted to any bed whatsoever. It can be affixed as readily to a cot or a surgical table, and the patient is held in such a way as not alone to avoid personal injury, but also to prevent the exposure of any part of the body. This will be especially advantageous in many cases where exposure to the air is especially deleterious to the sufferer's chances of recovery. The patient may be left entirely alone without fear, for the strongest man is utterly helpless when under the sheet. The sheet is made of heavy cotton duck, which can be both laundered and sterilized, thus fulfilling all hygienic conditions. The sheet fits close around the neck of the prostrate patient, being edged with chamois to avoid chafing. The arms come through two openings in the sheet and are held down in a chamois lined duck trap arrangement that gives ease yet security. The feet are strapped in like manner, being covered with an extra flap of cotton duck to keep off flies and air. This extra flap gives a certain freedom to the feet that would be impossible if placed under the main sheet which is drawn down tight by the fastenings. These are made in such a way as to be impossible to tear out. The head can be turned and the body to some extent, but the most frantic struggles would be productive of no harm on the part of the patient. Two extra straps can be run across the body if deemed necessary. The device has been in use in the city hospital in Baltimore for the past six months, and is given the highest endorsement.

PRESERVING CLIFF DWELLINGS

Movements to Turn a Colorado Region Into a National Park.

From the Denver Republican: As a result of a meeting held recently at the residence of Henry Van Kleeck, a bill making the cliff dwellings region in the southwestern part of Colorado a national park will in all probability be introduced at the next convention of congress. Congressman John F. Shafroth, Judge George T. Sumner, Booth Malone and Dr. Camden M. Cohern, with the host, constituted the meeting. Congressman Shafroth went over the details of passing such a bill, and the other men present, all of whom have been on the ground, recapitulated all they personally gathered concerning the interesting ruins below Durango. Granting that the people living in the agricultural country contiguous to the cliff dwellings made no objections to the setting aside of the land containing these prehistoric buildings, and he had received almost an assurance that they would not, Mr. Shafroth saw no impediment in the way of passing the bill. Maps and pictures of the ground and ruins were carefully gone over and studied. While the dimensions of the area were not specified, it is thought that fifteen miles, running northeast and southwest, by four or five miles wide, will include the most important ground without infringing on any precious minerals or agricultural land. Mr. Shafroth made copious notes to take with him to Washington and will work for the passage of the bill. He advises that no appropriation be asked for in the first measure. It will be sought to make some provision for the care-taking of the ruins. Excavations must be made scientifically and will be restricted by license. Mr. Shafroth will try to enlist the interest of the Smithsonian institution. The matter will be pushed with all possible speed. At the present time two large exploring parties of 100 members each are being organized—one in San Francisco and one in the east—to visit the Mancos canyon and excavate in the ruins.

Something About Popes.

Of the 253 popes, 15 have been Frenchmen, 13 have been Greeks, 8 have been Syrians, 6 have claimed Germany for their birthplace, 5 have hailed from Spain, 2 were from Africa, 2 from Savoy, the same number having been sent by England, Sweden, Dalmatia, Holland, Portugal and Crete. Italy leads with a total of 190, all since 1523, having been selected from among Italian cardinals. Eight of the number did not live a month after succession; 40 lived less than a year, and 22 died when they had been less than two years on the pontifical throne, 54 between four and five years, 51 when they had reigned less than ten years, 51 before they had finished the fifteenth year, and 18 died after reigning between fifteen and twenty years. Only nine lived over twenty years after their elevation. Pius IX, who died during the early part of 1878, reigned longer than any of his predecessors, his pontificial life extending over a period of thirty-one years.

Straw Horseshoes.

In Japan most of the horses are shod with straw. Even the clumsiest of cart horses wear straw shoes, which, in their cases, are tied around the ankle with straw rope, and are made of the ordinary rice straw, braided so as to form a sole for the foot about half an inch thick.

British Domestic Servants.

No less than one-third of the women in the United Kingdom are employed as domestic servants. They number 1,748,954, so that domestic service is not only the largest women's calling, but the largest single calling for either men or women.

THE CHILD'S MIND.

Led Him Look Into Every Phase of Industrial Life.

Expand the child's mind by showing from time to time scenes from all sides of life. Take him today to studios and let him see how pictures are made; next week to silk factories, to learn the poetry of labor, and afterward to a brick yard and an iron foundry, not forgetting the claims of great churches and monuments upon an elevating education. The alternation of city and country is a delightful stimulant. When travel is possible we should give the child glimpses of mountains and sights of the sea, and let him become acquainted with mountaineers and fishermen, even as he ought in town to know something of the ways and thoughts of the workmen, so that he may come to feel sympathy with all sorts of people and understand the merit of labor. Experience of this kind is worth far more than theorizing in school books. It is not particularly interesting to a child to read that he should be grateful to all the people who supply him with his daily comforts—to the farmer, the baker, the manufacturer and the builder. But when he sees how grain grows and is converted into flour; how furniture is wrought from blocks of wood and thread woven into cloth, the whole history of the objects about him is revealed. The different parts of life become connected and he gets a sense of the thread of harmony that runs through it all. And he has a moment of satisfaction, coming through a feeling of kinship with the world, which is more useful than gratitude upon general principles.—Florence Hull Winterburn in the Woman's Home Companion.

Some Large Fees.

Sir Edwin Landseer received altogether between 8,000 and 9,000 pounds for designing the four lions which decorate the base of the Nelson column. Sir John Hawkshaw, prince of civil engineers, got 5,500 pounds for designing the Severn tunnel. Turner received 10,000 pounds for his "Dido Building Carthage," which now hangs in the National gallery; but it took him over eighteen months to paint it. Meissonier has twice asked and received 20,000 pounds for painting a portrait. The biggest genuine commission ever disbursed to a firm of auctioneers was paid by the Duke of Hamilton over the Hamilton palace sale of 1882—25,000 pounds. The largest fee ever earned by a jockey was the 25,000 pounds paid by the Count de Lagrange to Harry Grimshaw when he steered Gladiateur to victory in the Derby of 1865.

Paper Made from Peat.

An Austrian invention of recent occurrence is the conversion of bog peat into paper, carpet and even food for pigs. The inventor, Karl Zschoerner, has paid attention to peat for years, and after prolonged experiments has produced not only a variety of grades of paper, but textures, which for cheapness can scarcely be equaled by any modern products. A handful of dried peat looks like remnants of tobacco clippings and would hardly impress an observer as being of commercial consequence, but after being put through the inventor's process the mass becomes fibrous and can be treated like any other textile material. A large plant is being operated in Austria for manufacturing from peat. Samples of these products present the appearance of cloths and carpets of the highest quality.

Calvin's House in Geneva.

An imposing demonstration in honor of Calvin has just been held in the city of Geneva, which he raised to the proud position of "the Rome of Protestantism." A memorial tablet was affixed to the house which now occupies the site of Calvin's house, in the Rue Calvin, with the inscription: "John Calvin lived here, 1543-1564." Unfortunately for the precise truth of the inscription, the modest dwelling the great reformer really inhabited was pulled down in 1706, so that the memorial had to be placed upon another house occupying the same site. M. Vigier, who delivered the oration at the public unveiling of the tablet, made a touching allusion to this fact. Wildhaus, the little commune of the Toggensburg, where Zwingi, the reformer of German Switzerland, was born, has reverently preserved intact its far more ancient "Zwinglihutte."

War Secretaries.

Twenty-two military men and eighteen civilians have occupied the position of secretary of war in this country's history. Those who had either been soldiers or had some kind of military experience were: Knox, Pickering, McHenry, Marshall, Dearborn, Eustis, Armstrong, Monroe, Shelby, Porter, Cass, Poinsett, Marcy, Davis, Grant, Thomas, Schofield, Rawlins, Belknap, Proctor, Elkins, Alger. The following have been civilians: Dexter, Griswold, Calhoun, Barbour, Eaton, Butler, Bell, Spencer, Floyd, Cameron, Stanton, Taft, Don Cameron, McCrary, Ramsey, Lincoln, Endicott, Lamont. Secretary Lincoln wore a uniform for a brief period.

Salmon Being Exterminated.

Dr. Grinnell, editor of Forest and Stream, has just returned with the Harriman exploring expedition from Alaska. He brings what is probably the most important information gathered by scientists—namely, that the salmon in the streams of the territory are being rapidly exterminated. The fisheries devoted to this important industry make quite a figure in the Pacific trade, and the editor named suggested that some measure for the preservation of the fish be taken before it is too late. The salmon canning business far exceeds in value the seal catch, about which so much international controversy has raged for so many years.

Birds for Bonnets.

One million five hundred and thirty-eight thousand seven hundred and thirty-eight is the precise number of birds estimated by our consul in Venezuela to have been killed last year to provide aigrettes for ladies' hats.

—WOOD WANTED:—We will be ready now at any time, for the wood to be delivered on subscription. It would be well to get it here before roads are muddy. As we now have no engine, would prefer wood that can be used in cook stove, at least for most of it.

A party of Filipinos ditched a train on the railroad north of Manila one day last week, and as the passengers and some soldiers who were on board, began to climb out, fired into the confused crowd. One soldier was killed but his friends rallied and drove the enemy away.

One year ago, Thomas Bauman of English, this state, offered different men $500 if they would kill him. None of them was willing to do the job, so he killed himself. Now a man named Boyle has been arrested, on the charge that he took the $500. Boyle laughs at the idea, but admits he was offered the money, but refused it.

—A curious case is coming up in court in Pike county. About a year ago, a man was divorced from his wife, and she moved to Chicago, and got employment. As he is quite wealthy, she may get something.

Before the Anglo-Venezuelan boundary commission yesterday, former President Benjamin Harrison continued his argument on behalf of Venezuela. DOINGS OF WOMEN

THE AVERAGE WOMAN.

OUR country has been helped on its upward and onward path unspeakably by its possession of a wealth that has no superior in the making of states, and that belongs to it in greater proportion than to any other country—and that is its average women.

There was no work of which these women were ashamed, or which, being necessary to others, they regarded as too menial for themselves; if there were a service to be done, the only question was how best to do it. They made great sacrifices in order that their sons should have the highest education obtainable; they had a pride and concern in their neighbors' sons; they watched the progress of events with as keen attention as they did the affairs of the village. Their hands might be rough with toil, their faces seamed with care, their dress unacquainted with fashion, but, nevertheless, if it had been necessary for them to stand in the presence of royalty they would have done so unabashed and perfectly at home, and have given the onlookers a notion of the inherent royalty of worth and honor. Whatever the shortcomings of these women may have been, they were all eclipsed by the largeness of their virtues.

There is no other country that has this proud distinction. For in other lands the woman who "does own her own work," who is imbrowned and bent by toil and wears the hodden-gray, is very rarely a thinker or a reader, has no avenues of learning, and has no sense open on the side of affairs or of the wide events of the larger life. Had these women of ours been born in the middle of civilization, and received the training and association of the environment there, they would often have become historical figures; as it is, they have assisted in the making of history. They instilled patriotism into their children as they rocked the cradle; they gave them force, energy, determination, endeavor, and they directed all those qualities into the right trend. It is always with their mothers' instincts in their blood that these children have gone on and leveled mountains, reduced forests, bridged rivers, built cities, subdued a continent. And in the meantime these women antedated all the women of clubs and societies. They had a great hunger for sympathy in their outlook, their thought, and work; but they were obliged to be club and society for themselves. They were but the average women of the wide country, but they were not only sometimes the mothers of presidents, they were the mothers of America.—Harper's Bazar.

Midsummer Hats.

Cards Instead of Calls.

A cardcase has become an almost useless institution, now that card-leaving has to a very large extent taken the palce of calls among the members of the highest circles of society. A cardcase with them has become a thing of the past, declares a London paper, being totally unequal to the demands made upon it nowadays. A large bag has taken its place, the contents of which are distributed by the magnificent "Jeames," who receives them from the hands of his mistress. Dozens are disposed of during an afternoon's "round."

The substitution of cards for calls saves trouble, but has a curious effect upon society by removing the only opportunity by which fresh acquaintances can become, as a rule, really known to each other.

Beats a Dime Novel Heroine.

Miss Claire Helena Ferguson is known as "the girl sheriff of Utah." She is young and beautiful, highly educated and prominent in society, but she has had as many thrilling experiences as the border heroine of a dime novel. She prevented the escape of "Handsome Gray," the most desperate criminal in Utah. She nearly lost her life at the hands of a lunatic. She is the only woman ever invited to visit the "Robber's Roost," the rendezvous of a lawless gang of cattle thieves. She saved a woman thief from suicide.

MISS FERGUSON.

Gifts from Men.

The gifts which a young woman may receive from a man who is not a relative are so limited that the giver cannot complain that "the impediment lies in the choosing." Flowers, bonbons, books and music may be accepted. When this rule is firmly adhered to a girl may have the satisfaction of knowing that she is following one of the first principles of social law. A jewel, ring or personal ornament should not be accepted from any other than the man to whom she is engaged to be married. The earlier these rules become established in a young girl's mind the easier it will be for her to avoid misunderstandings and to free herself from troublesome perplexities.

A young girl should be as chary of giving presents to men who are not relatives as she should be in her correspondence with them. It does not follow that she is a prude because she is careful in these small proprieties, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. A man values her more if she gives nothing than if she lavishes presents. If she is engaged to him, she may send what pleases her fancy; but if she avoids making gifts until then she will never be a prey to regret.

ABOUT THE BABY.

The hot days of summer are dangerous days for the bottle-fed baby, unless the greatest care is exercised in the cleansing of his bottles. Even the most carefully prepared food may be poisoned if carelessness is permitted in the washing of baby's utensils. Very few people know how to wash a bottle clean, says the New York Star. Don't call a bottle clean unless it shines like new glass. It cannot be made clean enough for baby's use with hot water or soap, and especially if one of the "wapsy" things usually sold for a bottle brush is used. The bottle brush must have good bristles and a strong handle. After all the milk has been rinsed off from the bottle that can be with cold water, then put in some powdered borax, and with the strong brush it can be made to shine. Now place the bottle in cold water to completely cover it, and let the water heat slowly and boil for twenty minutes. Then let it cool enough so that you can comfortably handle it. The day's supply of food being ready, it can be put immediately into the bottles and tightly corked with absorbent cotton. About ten minutes before baby's meal time place the bottle in a pitcher of warm water. When warm enough remove the absorbent cotton, put on the nipple, and it is ready for baby.

Unsympathetic Wives.

Isn't it a pity that so many women fail utterly in understanding and being suitable companions to their husbands? They do not seem able to attempt to even pretend to take an interest in his habits or pleasures, though expecting him to be interested in their most trivial pursuits or domestic worries.

It is a solemn fact that some women seem far more taken up with the shortcomings of their cook or housemaid than in the fact that their husband has painted a famous picture, or, maybe, written the book of the season. One such wife was heard to remark, not long ago, concerning her husband's picture: "Fancy my horror when I saw that he had painted a baby in a torn pinafore and all his broken toys at his feet, just as if we were too poor to buy him new ones."

This sort of wife wonders, as time goes on, what is the reason, when theirs was a love match to begin with, that she and her husband are living such distinctly different lives. Not for one moment, however, does it occur to her that the remedy has always been in her own hands.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Duties of Wives.

"It is a man's duty to acquaint his wife with every business matter of mutual interest," writes Frances Evans, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "She should be given an insight into the purpose of his business or profession; her sympathetic interest in these matters should be encouraged, not turned aside; moreover, she should be taught the meaning of at least the ordinary business expressions and technicalities. Then if she fail to do her part the man will be in nowise responsible for her mistakes. If I were a young married man with only $1,000 saved up, I should make a will in favor of my wife and children, if only to save her the trouble of court proceedings in the adjustment of her third. Some men are cowards about making a will, and others procrastinate. The cowards are afraid that the mere act of drawing up a will might precipitate them into a premature grave, while the procrastinator puts off a recognized duty from day to day until it is too late."

Too Often Neglected.

One of the best tests of good housewifeliness is the exterior appearance of a home. The windows should be brilliantly clean and bright, the blinds should be pulled up evenly in all windows, the curtains neatly draped, the front steps immaculately white, and the flower-boxes fresh and green. Such a house will suggest, even to the passing stranger, an interior that is neat and pure and sweet; while, equally as strongly, dirty window panes, muddy steps and blinds all awry, will induce a feeling of suspicion about the cleanliness and comfort of the house inside. The outside of the platter must be, and is, cared for by the notable housekeeper.

CRIME OF THE AGES.

DREYFUS CASE THE DARKEST DRAMA IN HISTORY.

A Story of Tragic Incidents, Foul Intrigue, Vile Treachery, Suffering Innocence and Triumphant Villainy.

The story of Alfred Dreyfus, a captain in the French artillery, who was reconvicted on the charge of selling state secrets to the German Government, is one of the most remarkable in the history of the world. It is a story full of dramatic and tragic incidents, of foul intrigue and vile treachery, of forgery, assassination, suicide and almost every species of crime and wickedness known to desperate and degenerate men. That dreadful drama that has so dishonorably affected a nation has overthrown five French cabinets, has driven three men to suicide, others to exile and many to undying shame and infamy. Nor is the end yet. Truth, justice, the sympathy and moral support of the unprejudiced in every land are on the side of Dreyfus, and the day will eventually come when the French nation will declare the innocence of the man whom it has twice condemned.

Dreyfus' Career.

Alfred Dreyfus is an Alsatian Jew. He received a military training at the Ecole Polytechnique, Paris, and in 1878 was appointed to a sub-lieutenancy. He made a specialty of the artillery service and his rise was rapid. In 1889 he was a captain in the army; in 1893 he was attached to the general staff—the first Hebrew to hold that position. He was married, the father of two children, and the future seemed roseate.

But Dreyfus was a Jew—a crime in France. Hounding Jews in that opera bouffe of a republic is a pastime and a passion. Schemers curry favor by it in the estimation of the baser elements, and France has a superabundance of the former. Then Dreyfus was brilliant and studious. These qualities generated envy, and so, in 1894, when certain high-born and accomplished rascals wanted a victim upon whom to cast the odium of their malodorous lives, what more natural than to select the despised and envied Jew—Dreyfus?

HISTORICAL CONFRONTATION OF HENRY AND PICQUART.

Selling State Secrets.

In that year—1894—spies of the French secret service department recovered a letter from the office of the German embassy in Paris which seemed to indicate that some Frenchman was carrying secret information to that office. The letter contained the sentence: "This dog of a D—— is really getting too greedy." In September, 1894, the spies brought to light another document known as the bordereau. It was in the nature of a memorandum naming five military secrets which the writer offered to convey to the unnamed person he was addressing. It was turned over to the miserable Mercier, French Minister of War, and he summoned experts who pronounced it to be the work of Dreyfus. Major du Paty de Clam, one of the most execrable scoundrels who have figured in the whole national drama, was given the bordereau for further investigation. He summoned Dreyfus before him. The investigation was secret, and the infamous Paty de Clam pronounced Dreyfus guilty, and added that the latter had made a full confession. Dreyfus was arrested and incarcerated in the Cherche Midi military prison.

The First Conviction.

In December, 1894, Dreyfus was put on trial before a court-martial. The trial was a farce. It is now known that not a particle of credible proof was adduced against him. Casimir-Perier, then President of France, left it on record that only one incriminating document was laid before the judges, and that document was a forgery. The principal witnesses against the prisoner were Colonels Henry, Esterhazy and Paty de Clam. Dreyfus was convicted. His conviction was necessary to shield others just as his second conviction was decreed upon for reasons of state. Jan. 5, 1895, Dreyfus was publicly degraded, his sword being broken and his uniform defaced. The Parisian mob shouted "Down with the Jews!" and "Live the army!" and a little later the prisoner was taken to Devil's Island, off the coast of French Guiana, to suffer imprisonment for life.

Working for the Prisoner.

The case of Dreyfus apparently was closed. The conspirators who had condemned him were strong and powerful. It was unpopular and unsafe to speak a word in favor of the prisoner or of the proscribed race to which he belonged.

But the case was not closed. The heroic wife of the prisoner, Mme. Lucie Dreyfus, remained, to fight for the honor of her husband, in whom she believed, and well and loyally did she wage her battle against entrenched wrong and injustice and hate. Friends rallied around her, and in the press and legislative halls the case of Dreyfus was kept ever to the front.

In June, 1895, Col. George Picquart became head of the secret intelligence of the war office. Documents came into his hands that convinced him that Esterhazy had written the bordereau and that Dreyfus was innocent. He communicated this belief to Generals Boisdeffre and Gonse. But Esterhazy stood high in their regard, and Picquart was sent on a perilous mission to Africa in the hope that he would never return. This was in the fall of 1896.

Others, however, followed along the lines of Picquart in his investigation. Scheurer-Kestner asserted the innocence of Dreyfus, and Mathieu Dreyfus, brother of the prisoner, openly accused Esterhazy as the author of the bordereau. The agitation was so strong that in January, 1898, the war office ordered a whitewash court-martial for Esterhazy. Picquart was recalled to testify. Esterhazy was acquitted according to program, and then Picquart was arrested on a trumped-up charge of forgery and sent to prison. The war office was still in the ascendant, while the lonely prisoner on Devil's Island was eating out his heart in suffering and shame.

The Zola Episode.

Then came the novelist, Emile Zola, who in an open letter charged Esterhazy, Henry and the chiefs of the war office with conspiracy to ruin Dreyfus. This brought upon his head the wrath of the army chiefs and he was tried for slander and found guilty. He appealed, was again convicted and fled from France. M. Labori was his counsel.

France at this time was in a state of the utmost disorder. There were frequent riots. The cabinet of M. Meline fell, to be succeeded by that of M. Brisson, and the general political fabric seemed on the verge of breaking up. At this juncture—July, 1898—War Minister Cavaignac asserted his belief in Dreyfus' guilt, and his speech to this effect in the Chamber of Deputies was ordered posted throughout France. He produced a document at the time that he said had convinced him of Dreyfus' guilt.

It was retorted that the document was a forgery and was committed by Col. Henry. The latter soon afterward admitted his guilt and then committed suicide. Previous to this Lemercier-Picard, who figured in the scandal, committed suicide, and last spring, Lorimier, Col. Henry's former clerk, followed suit.

After the Henry fiasco Cavaignac resigned as Minister of War. Gen. Zurlinden succeeded him, and he soon resigned because he was opposed to a revision of the Dreyfus case. A month later still another War Minister, Gen. Chanoine, went down and out for the same reason, and after him the whole cabinet. Francois de Pressense was expelled from the Legion of Honor because he raised his voice for Dreyfus, and others suffered social ostracism and political death for like offenses. There were accusations and recriminations, threats of riot and rebellion, and other resignations from high offices, all because of the exile away off on the coast of Guiana.

New Trial Ordered.

This was the situation at the opening of the present year. Then the testimony of Dreyfus, taken on Devil's Island, was presented before the Court of Cassation, which was considering the granting of a new trial to Dreyfus. Events then crowded on one another. Paty de Clam was arrested in Paris and imprisoned. Esterhazy, who had fled to London, confessed that he was the author of the bordereau. In June the Court of Cassation ordered a new trial for Dreyfus and referred the case to the Rennes court-martial. July 1 Capt. Dreyfus arrived at Rennes, and Aug. 7 the second court-martial began.

The details of the trial, famous and infamous alike, and the outrageous conviction of the prisoner are familiar to all. The fight made for their client by M. Labori and M. Demange and the prejudiced and unfair rulings of the court-martial's president, Col. Jouaust, will live, the one a record of honor, the other a record of shame. It was not Dreyfus so much as France that was on trial at Rennes, and France convicted herself of an infamy as deep, an injustice as black and a dishonor as great as ever stained the life of a nation. But one thought can come to a person considering the present result of the drama: "A government that cannot do justice to the humblest of its citizens has no justification to exist."

Consumption of Beer.

It is estimated that the consumption of beer in the entire world amounts to $1,080,000,000 per annum.

PORTO RICO'S RUINS.

TERRIBLE DEVASTATION OF THE GREAT HURRICANE.

Pictures of the Havoc Wrought in Our Peaceful Isle, Many Pathetic Incidents and Deeds of Heroism Followed the Passage of the Storm.

The recent West Indian hurricane, with its attendant loss of life and damage to property, was one of the worst calamities of the century. In Porto Rico alone the death list reached nearly 1,500, while the number of injured was three times larger. As to the damage and destruction of property, that is inestimable. Whole villages were swept away; growing crops were washed out by flood or leveled by the wind, shipping was dealt a costly blow, and the sea, for days and days after the terrific storm, tossed upon the shores of the island a heterogeneous mass of wreckage that told of disaster to vessels, the crews of which perished. Scores of ghastly, bloated corpses came floating ashore to add their ghastliness and horror to the awful scenes already depicted there. Now and then, after the storm, a disabled and long-overdue steamer made its almost helpless way into the harbor, and from the men aboard these were gotten the stories of the storm's awful fury at sea. The entire island of Porto Rico was storm swept, but the worst destruction was wrought along the southern coast in the vicinity of Ponce and twenty miles inland. Sickening scenes abounded upon every side; half-dazed, sunken eyed, weeping men, women and children went wailing to and fro; rows of dead awaited identification; strings of dead carts, with their gruesome burdens, rattled away to the cemeteries, while everywhere there was an oppressive, heart-rending, funereal atmosphere that seemed to hang like a pall of despair over the stricken isle.

A BADLY WRECKED VILLAGE.

Full particulars of the terrible storm show the great destruction and accentuate the horrible condition of the peasant, or peon. Houses and roofs to shelter were as serious questions as food was before the government issued free rations and made other provisions to feed the destitute. The ruins in most cases consisted of a floor only, with a few articles left thereon. At Ponce and along the southern shore the hurricane spent its greatest fury.

RUINS OF A NATIVE ABODE.

The front of the storm reached there about daylight and the wind and rain continued to increase til about noon, when they gradually subsided. This advance guard had broken the palm trees, snapped off and stripped of their fruit the banana and plantain trees—the chief food of the peons—and had torn and beaten down the coffee trees and the sugar cane. Many houses had been unroofed; but few, if any, lives were lost, though many were injured by the flying debris.

At dusk the worst seemed to be over, for the wind and rain had ceased. But between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening the storm recommenced, accompanied by torrential rain and gales. The little Portuguese River, usually a mere creek, already swollen from the morning rain, became a raging torrent. It jumped out of its banks at a curve just above Ponce, and swept down through the streets. Small houses, with whole families, were borne down in its resistless current and either lodged in some fence corner or carried out to sea. In one yard in the city were found the bodies of daughter, father, mother and grandmother.

At one place in the street where the drift was checked, twenty-four bodies were picked up, most of them peons. Some of them, however, gave evidence of refinement and one was thought to be an American, but so quickly does decomposition set in in that hot climate that it was impossible to recognize him. Dr. Sidley, an American physician, had a narrow escape from death. He had recently purchased and fitted up a handsome home, preparatory to receiving the bride he expected soon to bring from Chicago. He remained in his house as long as was possible. Tying his money to his arm, and in his underclothes only, he struggled through water up to his neck and at times over his head. Fortunately some one grasped him by the hair as he swept past a house and he was saved.

The flood was at its height near midnight and the scenes along the river were heartrending. House after house floated past toward the ocean, carrying its three, four, and even more, wretched passengers, who uttered piteous cries for help. The night was lighted by incessant flashes of lightning, though with little thunder. Many persons held lamps at their windows and balconies to aid the struggling and their rescuers.

It was a wonderful but horrible sight. A city of 30,000 people was entirely under water, a foaming torrent pouring through the streets; lightning flashing; men, women and especially children struggling with the current, and then drowning; the rain ceaselessly coming down in sheets.

Many Heroic Incidents.

There were many instances of heroism displayed. The Eleventh Infantry, U. S. A., led by their adjutant, saved at least 100 lives, by rescuing people from the water. The adjutant personally saved fifteen from drowning. With a life line tied to his waist, he dashed bravely into the torrent again and again, depending upon his men to draw his body out. The firemen of Ponce also worked bravely, and one noble fellow lost his life.

A flat valley, usually ten or twelve feet above the water level, extends along Del Rio Portugues, stretching from half a mile to a mile on either side. On this plain the plantations are situated. Around the planter's house, and often near the river bank, cluster the huts of the peons, or laborers, from twenty to fifty on each plantation. Emila Quinones, a prosperous planter living near the river a few miles above the city, and his whole household of thirty souls, were carried away and not one saved.

Native estimates place the dead at 3,000 for the Ponce district alone, but the real number will never be known.

IN WAKE OF HURRICANE.

All were buried in haste. Who they were, what they were, will never be found out.

HE GOT WELL,

And the Despised Little German Band Saved His Life.

It was a sad scene. The old man lay on his bed, and by him sat the faithful wife, holding his worn hand in hers, and forcing back the tears to greet his wondering look with a smile. But he felt the cold hand falling on him, and he turned his weary eyes up to her pale, wan face.

"Jennie, dear, I am going."

"Oh, no, John—not yet—not yet."

"Yes, dear wife," and he closed his eyes; "the end is near. The world grows dark about me. There is a mist around me gathering thicker and thicker, and there, as through a cloud, I hear the music of angels—sweet and sad."

"No, no, John, dear; that isn't angels; that's the brass band at the corner."

"What!" said the dying man. "Have those scoundrels dared to come here when they know I'm dying? Give me my bootjack. I'll let 'em see."

And, in a towering rage, the old man jumped from his bed, and, before his wife could think, he had opened the window and shied the bootjack at the band.

"I've hit that fat leader in the neck!"

And he went back to bed and got well.

He Sized Up His Customer.

A rather loudly dressed "gentleman" stepped into the necktie department of a big shop the other afternoon, and in a supercilious tone that would have nettled a graven image into anger uttered the single mandatory word:

"Neckties!"

Then he threw back his head as if the assistant was entirely beneath his notice. This top-lofty air aggravated the assistant, but he quietly displayed a number of late patterns with a deferential air.

"These," he said obseqiously, "are the very newest things and are excellent quality at a shilling."

"A shilling!" haughtily snapped the customer; "a shilling! Do I look like a man who would wear a shilling necktie. Is there anything about me to indicate that I——"

"I beg your pardon, sir," meekly interposed the assistant; "the sixpenny counter is at the other end of the shop."—London Tid-Bits.

Pianos and Literary Reform.

A funny story about Miss Marie Corelli comes from Stratford-on-Avon, where that mystic novelist has been living opposite a young ladies' school. It appears that in this school are many pianos, daily practice upon which by the pupils has been excessively damaging to Miss Corelli's nerves. Driven to desperation, she wrote to the principal of the school, asking that when piano-forte practice was going forward the windows might be kept closed, as the noise interfered with the progress of literary composition. To which the schoolmistress replied that if the noise would prevent the composition of another book like the "Sorrows of Satan" she would order half a dozen more pianos.—New York Tribune.

Ancient New Mexican Idols.

Agents of the bureau of ethnology at Washington have taken photographs of the unique collection of stone idols owned by ex-Gov. L. Bradford Prince, of Santa Fe, N. M. He has over 1,000 of them, and they were all dug up on the sites of ancient Pueblo villages. Some are over six feet in height; some are light enough to float in water. It is difficult to tell the age of the idols; it is only known that they were used by the ancestors of the present Pueblo Indians before the Spanish conquest.

Least Interesting Country.

An English traveler declares that the least interesting country in the world to visit is Corea.

GREAT DEPTHS OF LAKES.

Distance to the Bottom Varies from 1,386 to 210 Feet.

If the chain of great lakes which bound the northern limits of a portion of the United States could be reached to the level of the sea two of the chains would be practically wiped off the face of the earth. Lake Michigan would become two lakes much smaller than the present majestic body of water which lies off Chicago. Chicagoans could travel on what is now the bottom of the lake as far north as a point midway between the shores off Milwaukee and Grand Haven without getting their feet wet. But while this statement duly explained shows the great depth of the great lakes, the mariner is concerned only with the shore line and any obstructions of navigation in the usual channels. The recent grounding of a huge freighter off Drummond Island in the northern straits shows how faulty the surveys and soundings of the chain are relative to modern vessels.

DEPTHS FROM CHICAGO TO ST. JOSEPH.

The freighter standing up the channel to the "Soo" was in what her chart declared to be thirty-four feet of water. As she draws about thirteen she had plain sailing. But when all were snug and confident the ship drove onto a rock and was stuck fast aground. This rock lies but ten feet below the surface. Ten years ago it was no obstruction for the reason that the average draught of lake vessels was about eight feet on the load water line. To-day it is much nearer fifteen or even eighteen, so the soundings of years ago are not altogether reliable in channels dotted with small islands.

The Government, through the engineers of the army, makes frequent soundings in harbors and along shore lines. Changes in types of vessels, changes in currents, changes in water levels when found to be permanent all require modifications of existing charts. Probably no system of internal waterways is so thoroughly charted as the great lakes. Yet it is no infrequent thing for some vessel to run aground on concealed obstructions where the detailed sounding charts establish a depth of water more than three times sufficient to float the vessel.

X AT INTERSECTION OF TWO LINES SHOWS POINT WHERE VESSEL GROUNDED.

Six years ago the old Michigan made a series of harbor soundings for Chicago. No lake port in the whole system has been more thoroughly explored than this. Yet W. J. Wilson of the hydrographic office says that it would not be a matter for surprise if a large vessel, freight or passenger, should find something the Michigan overlooked. Mr. Wilson says that unless an exact topographical chart of every acre of harbor is made it cannot be relied upon conclusively. Yet the charts as made are trustworthy because they cover the ground so fully that changes from the depths marked in detail are not probable.

As soon as an obstruction is located and reported new soundings are made over it and all about for a long distance to determine its extent and the possibility of its being one of a group. These new charts are issued as soon as completed and every shipmaster has one for future guidance. Of course in the lakes where shore lines are so close sailing by the compass is not so exact as it is at sea. Still, masters are expected to be able to do this whenever called upon. In lake charts, however, obstructions are plated both by latitude and longitude and with reference to lights or harbors nearest at hand.

No system of lakes presents as wide variations of extreme depth as the big fresh water system. Beginning with Superior and following the chain eastward they vary from 1,386 feet to but 210. They are respectively 602 feet above sea level for Superior, 581 each for Michigan and Huron, 573 for Erie and but 247 for Ontario. Superior is far the deepest, with Michigan second. Ontario is close on its heels, being within a few feet of Huron, while Erie is so shallow that its greatest depth is thirty-six feet less than the midlake depth of Michigan between Chicago and St. Joseph. Erie can claim but 210 feet extreme depth.

Superior, if reduced to the sea level, would be robbed of two-thirds of its dimensions. The extreme depth is well east of the middle line. Michigan has her greatest depth, 1,000 feet up toward the straits. Huron is less than 800 while Ontario has a depth of 735 feet owing to the falls of Niagara. If all were brought to sea level Erie would be 500 feet above, Michigan would be a couple of ponds, Huron almost out of it, Superior a lake not much larger than many another and Ontario the largest of the system.

The Country's Physicians.

At the present rate of increase the United States will have in 1900 about 125,000 physicians.

A Swimming Grindstone.

Some of the fishermen on the River Tyne, in England, are not only ignorant, but stupid. On one occasion, two of these fishermen were caught by a heavy freshet, and driven out of the river to sea. As the story goes, one of the men saw, in the dusk, a hoop floating by. The hoop was full of foam.

"We are saved!" exclaimed the man. "Here's a grindstone swimming."

He followed up his discovery by jumping on the "grindstone," but the result was not very satisfactory.

From a Tough Bird.

"The pillows in this boarding house are the hardest I ever struck," complained the new boarder at the breakfast table. "I wonder what they are made of."

"Perhaps," said the star boarder, "of feathers from a tailor's goose."—Detroit Free Press.

SUFFERED 25 YEARS

Congressman Botkin, of Winfield, Kansas.

In a recent letter to Dr. Hartman, Congressman Botkin says:

"My Dear Doctor—It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines—Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin. I have been afflicted more or less for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation. A residence in Washington has increased these troubles. A few bottles of your medicine have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of them will effect a permanent cure. Pe-ru-na is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections.

"J. D. BOTKIN."

The most common form of summer catarrh is catarrh of the stomach. This is generally known as dyspepsia. Congressman Botkin was a victim of this disease twenty-five years. Pe-ru-na cures these cases like magic. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O., for a free book.

The microbes that cause chills and fever and malaria enter the system through mucous membranes made porous by catarrh. Pe-ru-na heals the mucous membranes and prevents the entrance of malarial germs, thus preventing and curing these affections.

THE PRAISE OF THE PRESENT.

Poets there be who tune their lyres to days of long ago
And sing a song of sentiment in measures sad and low.
To them the golden age is past, the golden fleece is clipped;
The rose of pleasure hath been plucked, the cup of joyance sipped;
They live in longing for the lost, the dead of Might Have Been.—
But I—a bard most practical—count all such singing sin.
 To me these days, these present days,
 Have fertile fields and flower ways,
 Wherein my fancy fondly strays;
And if I had a song to sing, I'd sing about these days.

And there be bards who rave a stave concerning Days To Be.
When all things shall be lovely and luxuriant and free.
When Joy shall reach her chalice down to thirsty mortal lip
And certain rare elected ones to drunkenness shall sip;
The bud has yet to blossom and the honey to be stored
Ere hungry souls may sit them down and sweep the festal board.
 But as for me I say These Days
 Hold pastures where my soul may graze
 And drink delights and gather bays;
And if I knew a stave to rave, I'd rave about These Days.

To me These Days are golden-tipped with goodly thoughts and things,
And Opportunity but waits to spread her splendid wings
At my command, to bear me up and make my vision wide,
That I may sweep the height, the deep and know them deified!
The golden Days of Long Ago, the golden Days To Be
Are not so wonderful by half as These Days are to me;
 And so These Days, these golden days,
 To me are rich with wine and maize
 And minstrel-sweet with harvest lays;
And were I piping Pan himself, I'd pipe about These Days.

HOW HE WAS AVENGED.

By Conan W. Doyle.

The travelers from beyond Moradabad having reached Kaladoongie, were discovered to be men of consequence by the Thanadar, and were invited by him to join the circle of the great round his fire on the evening of their arrival. It was very warm and the dismal silence was only accented by the distant howl of a lonely jackal. The sheet lightning flickered fitfully over the foothills, mocking the gasping Teral with its faint promise of a coming change.

The conversation round the fire flagged, and the hookah passed languidly from hand to hand. Those present would have retired to sleep, had sleep been possible; but as that was a consummation not easily attained at this season of the year, they preferred their present miseries to those that come in the wakeful night watches when the Teral is athirst. Ram Deen's arrival was a nightly boon to those who were wont to assemble round the Thanadar's fire; there was always the possibility of his having news; and, besides, men seemed to acquire fresh vitality from contact with his vigorous personality. The strangers were especially grateful for his arrival; and when he had taken his usual place beside the fire the hookah was at once passed to him.

"Any tidings, coach-wan ji?" inquired the Tenadar.

"None, sahib, save that the great frog in the well at Lal Kooah—who is as old as the well, and wiser than most men—gave voice just ere I started, and the bunnia said it was a sure sign of rain within two days, as the frog's warning had never been known to fail."

"Nana Debi send it be so," exclaimed the little carrier, "for my bullocks be starved for the lack of green food, and phoosa (chaff) is past my means."

"Thou shouldst not complain, Goor Dutt," said Ram Deen, with a smile; "their very leanness is thy passport through the jungle. Fatter kine would have been devoured and their driver with them long ere this."

Hint of danger that might be encountered in the jungle having thus been given, one of the strangers was moved to ask concerning the lame tiger of Huldwani, part of whose biography they had heard from Ram Deen at Lal Kooah on the previous day.

"Coach-wan ji, wast thou not afraid to carry the mail after the slaying of thy hostler, Nandha?"

"Those who carry the queen's mail may not stop for fear. Nevertheless, fear rode with me a day and a night after the death of Nandha."

"It is a great thing," said the little carrier, nodding at the wayfarers, while Ram Deen "drank tobacco."

When Ram Deen had passed the hookah to his neighbor, he went on: "Brothers, on the day that Nandha was carried off by the tiger, I sent word to the postmaster of Naini Tal concerning the killing, and the outgoing mail brought me word that the sirdar (government) would send me help. Ye know that a tiger kills not two days in succession; so I had no fear when I traversed the road to and from Lal Kooah till the second day after the slaying of Nandha. Ere I started on that morning the munshi told me to drive to the dark bungalow for a sahib who had been sent to slay the slayer of men. Brothers, when I went to the dark bungalow there came forth to me a man child—a Faringi—whose chin was as smooth as the palm of my hand.

"I would have laughed, but that I thought of the tiger that I knew would be waiting for us, and taking pity on him, I said: 'The jungle hereabouts is full of wild fowl, sahib, and 'twere pity when shikar is so plentiful you should waste this morning looking for a budmash tiger who will not come forth for two days yet.' He answered me never a word, but went into the dark bungalow for something he had forgotten; and while he was gone his butler spake to me, saying: 'Coachman, make no mistake; thy life depends upon thy doing the sahib's bidding. He is a very Rustum, and he knoweth not fear, for all he is so young.' 'He is a man after my own heart, then sirdar; but, mashallah! I would he had a beard,' I replied.

"Presently the young sahib came forth with an empty bottle in one hand and a gun in the other. Throwing the bottle into the air he shattered it with a bullet ere it reached the ground. Startled by the report, a jackal fled from the rear of the cookhouse toward the jungle, and the sahib stopped its flight with another bullet. Then replenishing his gun, he took his seat beside me on the mail cart, saying, 'Blow on my bugle, coach-wan, and announce our coming to Shere Bahadoor, his majesty the tiger.'

"It was a brave jawan (youth), brothers; but he was very young, and belike he had a mother; so I swore in my beard to save him, whatever might befall. As we proceeded he questioned me concerning the killing of Nandha, speaking lightly as one who goeth to shoot black partridge.

"'He is lame, coach-wan, and will doubtless be waiting for us by the Bore bridge,' said the sahib. As soon as he appears stay the horses for an instant whilst I get off the mail cart, and then return when your horses will let you. The lame one of Huldwani is old and cunning; it is no fawn thou seekest this morning. Perchance the sirdar will dispatch some great shikari to help thee in this hunting. Gunga send we may not meet the tiger; but if we should shame befall me if I permit thee to leave the mail cart whilst the horses are able to run!'

"For answer, my brothers, the sahib flushed red, and, calling me a coward, he drove his elbow into my stomach with such force that the reins fell from my hands. Taking them up, the while I fought for my breath, he turned the horses round, saying: 'A jackal may not hunt a tiger. I have need of a man with me this morning, and Goor Deen, my butler, shall take thy place.'

"'The sahib, being a man, will not blacken my face in the eyes of Kaladoongie,' I said. 'I spake for thy sake, sahib; but I will drive thee to Jehandum as thou wilt, for no man hath ever called me coward before.' Then the sahib looking in my face as I tucked the ends of my beard under my puggri, and, seeing that my eyes met his four-square, he gave up the reins to me, saying: 'If thou playest me false I will kill thee like a dog;' and he showed me the hilt of a pistol that he had in his pocket. We spake no more together, but when we came to the Bore bridge I shook the jungle with a blast from my bugle.

"'Shabash!' coach-wan,' exclaimed the sahib; 'thou art a man, indeed, and shalt have Shere Bahadoor's skin as recompense for the hurt to thy stomach. Bid him come again.'

"Half a mile beyond the bridge, as we sped along the level road above the river I again blew upon the bugle. The sound had scarcely ceased when we heard the angry roar of a charging tiger.

"'Stop!' exclaimed the sahib; and I threw the frightened horses on their haunches, whilst he leaped to the ground. Then whilst the horses flew along the road, I looked back over my shoulder and beheld the Lame One bound into the middle of the road; and the sahib blew on his fingers, as one would whistle to a dog. The great beast stopped on the instant and crouched to the ground, ready to spring on the sahib as he advanced toward it, and I prayed to Nana Debi to befriend the young fool.

"When he was within thirty paces or so from the tiger, the sahib halted and brought the gun to his shoulder. The next instant there was the crack of a rifle, and the Lame One leaped straight into the air.

"I knew the tiger was dead; and immediately thereafter the mail cart ran into the bank and spilled me on the road. Leaving the stunned horses tied to a tree, I proceeded to seek the sahib. Wah ji wah! brothers, we must pay taxes to Faringis until we can raise sons like theirs. When I joined the boy sahib he was smoking, and taking the measure of the tiger with a tape! His bullet had struck the beast between the eyes, and the Lame One had died at the hands of a man!"—The Speaker.

His Rare Opportunity.

The ideal husband of the modern strong-minded woman has often been happily burlesqued, but probably never better than in this anecdote of a public speaker.

"Is there a man in all this audience," demanded the female lecturer on woman's rights, "that has every done anything to lighten the burden on his wife's shoulders? What do you know of woman's work? Is there a man here," she continued folding her arms, and looking over the assembly with superb scorn, "that has ever got up in the morning, leaving his tired, worn-out wife to enjoy her slumbers, gone quietly down stairs, made the fire cooked his own breakfast, sewed the missing buttons on the children's clothes, darned the family stockings, scoured the pots and kettles, cleaned and filled the lamps, and done all this, if necessary, day after day, uncomplainingly? If there be such a man in this audience, let him rise up! I should really like to see him!"

And in the rear of the hall, a mild-looking man in spectacles, in obedience to the summons, timidly arose. He was the husband of the eloquent speaker. It was the first time he had ever had a chance to assert himself.

Inspector Rutledge of the Northwest mounted police, who has returned from a prolonged patrol of the vast district between Alaska and Manitoba, reports that real buffaloes, so far from becoming extinct, are numerous and increasing. A bill has been brought into the Dominion House of Commons extending the close season for two years more, and after that restricting the killing to males.—New York Press.

A REMARKABLE KNOWLEDGE.

It Is Possessed by an Iowa Girl of Only Two Years.

Viola Olerich is the name of the most remarkable child in the State of Iowa, if not in the world. She is only two years and one month old, yet she is possessed of the gravity of a woman, and, indeed, her face is the face of a mature, intellectual woman. Viola, by the way, is a very pretty child and gives promise of developing into a beautiful young woman. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Olerich. Her father was recently superintendent of the public schools of Lake City, but he gave up the post for the purpose of devoting himself to the work of writing a treatise on education.

VIOLA OLERICH.

When Viola was one year and eleven months and twenty-five days old she passed an examination before two competent teachers. At that time the child knew not less than 3,000 substantives. It is probable that the vocabulary of this baby was at that time much larger than that of the ordinary man. Her father says that Viola knows more nouns than the average adult knows words. The unusual precocity of the child was nurtured and developed by the parents, and when she once began to learn she learned so rapidly that her natural guardians were scarce able to keep pace with her.

Records of the child's work were kept by her parents and are very interesting. There is first a scrapbook in which are pasted the pictures of 1,100 various objects. Viola can tell the name of any of these objects by looking at the picture. In a separate book is kept a record of the names of the objects the pictures of which are pasted in the scrapbook. Viola calls the scrapbook the "picture book." She readily recognizes all the pictures in the book, and cannot only do this but is also able to read a number of simple sentences.

Her education has been conducted on the "sentence method," or the synthetic rather than the analytical system of teaching. The results have been most marvelous. The child can understand things which do not come into the mind ordinarily until the age of fifteen or sixteen has been reached. Mr. Olerich's theory of teaching is what he calls the "natural method." It rests on three principles, which he describes as follows:

1. To awaken a keen interest for educational work by the use of attractive apparatus—playthings for the child.

2. To treat the child at all times with the greatest of kindness and equality.

3. All the educational works of the child should be an interesting game of play—purely voluntary. No element of coercion or even undue solicitation should ever be resorted to.

"The secret of such wonderful success in the use of the natural method of instruction," says Mr. Olerich, "lies in the fact that great interest means undivided attention, and close attention means retention. Kind treatment and voluntary learning continually increase the delight for further inquiry. With all her precocity, Viola has never 'studied' a lesson in her life. She has only 'played,' and she always wants to play longer."

LADY YARDE-BULLER INSANE.

Famous California Beauty Is Placed Under Care of a Guardian.

Lady Yarde-Buller, concerned in many remarkable episodes in Europe and California, has been adjudged insane, and a guardian appointed for her person and estate. She has run through a fortune in fifteen years and has gained notoriety by her eccentric behavior. Those who have been thrown into contact with her during the last few months testified that Lady Yarde-Buller's addiction to alcohol had increased so much that she is incompetent to manage her affairs. She spent her money recklessly and went so far as to actually throw it away on the streets. While her actual income is only about $400 or $500 a month she had been spending $600. Lady Yarde-Buller's career has been checkered. She was spoiled by her father, who was very wealthy, and when in her teens tried to elope in Japan with young Majoribanks, afterward Lord Tweedmouth. Then she wedded an Englishman named Blair, who was killed in South Africa. Soon after his death she married Yarde-Buller, a Scotchman, who taught her how to drink. They quarreled and he sued for a divorce, alleging that she showed too much partiality for the society of Valentine Gadsden, a mining promoter.

To agree with everybody is as bad as not to agree with anybody.

A Rural Court Scene.

A couple applied to a rural justice of the peace for total divorce. The justice called the bailiff aside and asked in a whisper:

"What's the law on that p'int?"

"You can't do it," replied the bailiff, "it don't come under yer jurisdiction."

"We're willin' to pay cash fer it," replied the husband, not understanding the nature of the consultation. "I've got the money in this here stockin'."

The justice looked grave. Then, adjusting his spectacles and addressing the man, said:

"You knowed 'fore you come here that 'twarn't fer me ter separate husband an' wife, an' yet, you not only take up the time o' this here valuable court with yer talkin', but ackchully perpose ter bribe me with money! Now, how much has you got in that stockin'?"

"'Bout six dollars an' a half, yer Honor."

"All right, then. I fine you $5 fer bribery an' a dollar an' a half fer takin' up my time with a case what my jurisdiction is out of, an' may the Lord have mercy on yer soul."—Atlanta Constitution.

The Best Man Wins.

Prize fighting may not be a pleasant subject, but it teaches a lesson—the inability of man to hold the championship for any length of time. How unlike that great champion of health, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which has for fifty years cured constipation, dyspepsia, biliousness and liver trouble.

From London to New York in Three Days.

Mr. Reid (the czar of Newfoundland) and his sons dream of shortening the trip between London and New York by fifty hours. Their own farm of Newfoundland will play a large part in this time-cutting scheme. The trip runs from London to Holyhead by rail, by boat to Dublin, by rail to Galway Bay, by fast steamer to Notre Dame Bay, Newfoundland, by rail to Port-aux-Basque, by boat to North Sydney, Cape Breton, and from there by rail to New York.—Ainslee's for October.

Fifty Cents for Nothing.

What will the inventive brain of man do next? This is a question some one asks almost daily. There is one, though, who leads all others, who for a quarter of a century has been making fine laundry starch, and to-day is offering the public the finest starch ever placed on the market. Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two packages of this new starch, "RED CROSS" (trade mark brand), also two children's Shakspeare pictures, painted in twelve beautiful colors, natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free. All grocers are authorized to give ten large packages of "RED CROSS STARCH" with twenty of the Shakspeare pictures or ten of the Twentieth Century Girl Calendars to the first five purchasers of the ENDLESS CHAIN STARCH BOOK. This is one of the greatest offers ever made to introduce "RED CROSS" laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

Somewhat Ungrateful.

A New York man fell overboard a few days ago and was rescued as he was sinking for the third time. The first thing he did on recovering consciousness was to soundly berate the man who had saved him, declaring that if he knew his business he would have caught him the first time he sank, not the third.

Ladies' Plaid Golf Capes.

The new fall and winter styles in ladies' wear are now out, and as a rule, are more bewitching than ever. A most fascinating garment is the ladies' plaid golf cape illustrated and described in another column of this paper by the John M. Smyth Co. of Chicago, and at the extraordinary price of $5.65. This golf cape is indeed wonderful value, and yet it is but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the enormous catalogue of the John M. Smyth Company.

For those who are accustomed to sending away from home for their goods it is of the greatest importance to know the character and reliability of the establishments selling goods to families from catalogues. A Girl's Experience in Boston.

A sparkling serial of Boston life, under the title of "Her Boston Experiences," will begin in the next issue of The Ladies' Home Journal. It is written by Margaret Allston, a vivacious, well-bred girl who spent a winter in Boston with relatives living in the Back Bay and was taken everywhere in the most exclusive social, dramatic, literary and musical circles. She saw the best and the worst of Boston life, and she tells both as she saw them, all in a bright but audaciously frank manner, until the picture becomes a perfect biograph of Boston life and people of to-day.

THE INDIANA GOLD FIELD.

Brown County and Morgan Furnish the Yellow Metal.

A very interesting article appears in a recent number of the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette on the gold district of Brown county, a part of which will be a surprise to many of our readers. Brown is the one county of the state that has no railroad and the people are emphatically a backwoods people. But for fifty years or more, some gold has been taken out every year, though no regular mining camps have been in existence, the washing being done by the farmers. Now, the Indianapolis & Southern railroad is cutting its way into the county to get the vast amount of hardwood lumber that is on its hills.

"But it is gold that has given Brown county its greatest claim to prominence. Professor John Collett, a learned Indiana geologist who died recently, once said there was enough gold in this county to pay the national debt, then grimly added that every dollar's worth of gold taken out of the county would require the expenditure of another dollar. And this is what hundreds of men who have ventured to pan the creeks of Brown county in the last century have found out, yet each summer finds the gold-seekers at work on the black sandbars.

This summer the activity was renewed with greater zest than ever, and prospectors are drifting up into Morgan county, where the finds are better and the signs more favorable. It is not uncommon to hear of men making $5 a day panning. Nothing more progressive in mining machinery than the old-fashioned rocker and rough sluice-box has even been utilized. While every rain brings down gold from the hillsides no one has been able to find quartz. It is all fine flour gold of twenty-two carats, and equal in quality and color to the best gold of the west African coast. No borings have been made, and the source of the gold is a mystery even to those geologists who maintain that it came down from the north with the glacial drift. The uniformity of its appearance notwithstanding the scantiness of quantity, leads to the general impression that nature placed the gold in solution, as it were, in these high, broad hills.

Mines in farm barnyards. In the spring, summer, and autumn, when attention can be diverted from the miserable garden patches, the farmers take a turn at the pans, an make profits ranging from 75 cents to $3 a day, every man having a gold mine in his barnyard. The scarcity of flowing water operates against larger profits.

Near Centerton, Morgan county, a few miles over the Brown county line, many phials of the flour gold have been secured this month. Most of the gold is sent to Indianapalis, where it is handled by one jeweler, Edward G. Gardner, who has great faith in the ultimate gold output of Brown and Morgan counties. Articles of jewelry are made of the Hoosier state gold, and Brown county gold has been a favorite in the emblem rings worn by local Scottish Rite Masons.

The state board of tax commissioners recently assessed the county at an average of $6.26 an acre for land and improvements, the whole value of the county being fixed at $1,789,000. Yet when a stranger appears on one of these gold bearing creeks and asks a farmer to put a price on his land, the value immediately jumps to $50 or more an acre, only to take a tumble when the stranger leaves. Seldom is a farm sold.

The sluice boxes used by the farmers are about five feet long. The black sand, with plenty of water, is poured into one end of the boxes and the particles of gold sink to resting places between the intercepting boards.

Much of the gold is so fine that it floats on the surface of the waters, and the miners use a simple method to catch it. A blanket is laid over the open top of the box, and is allowed to rest on the water flowing through. The minute grains of gold catch on the rough blanket, and are thus arrested. The blanket is taken to the farm house and placed in a warm room. It soon dries out, and is then beaten over paper spread on the floor.

Nuggets worth $35 have been found, but not recently."

New Resetting Revolver.

An Austrian gunmaker who has devoted great attention to revolvers and repeating rifles has patented a new form of revolver. In the present type of weapon the gas generated in the discharge is made use of for reloading and resetting the revolver, but in the new one these functions are performed by mechanism. Climatic conditions affect the gases and render the weapon less effective; this state of things is avoided by the new patent.

Among the Malayalis.

The Malayalis, a caste of Madras, have a most curious custom. A man having very young sons takes to himself new wives, which he calls his sons' wives, the children of the marriage being called the sons' children. This particular relation continues from one generation to another.

Men Who Wear Bracelets.

Bracelet-wearing men are said to be on the increase. The prince of Wales wears a gold bracelet at times on his left wrist—a bangle, by the way, which belonged to Maximilian, the ill-fated emperor of Mexico. The prince's brother, the duke of Saxe-Coburg, also wears a bracelet on his left wrist and a chain around his neck. The late duke of Albany, although never considered of a superstitious disposition, always believed a certain good luck attached to the bangle which he wore. The late Archduke Rudolph wore a massive bracelet and chain, and King Humbert also displays a bracelet.—M. A. P.

Victims of the Explosion.

The condition of the four men hurt in the explosion at the band sawmill yesterday morning shows but little change today, and the reports that have been put in circulation regarding the probable death of some of them seem to be without foundation. Interviews with the physicians employed in the different cases would indicate that, though the men were badly injured, the results will not be as serious as at first supposed.

Engineer Richmond was badly scalded about the legs, but the worst of his injuries seem to be about the head and neck, and it may be several days before their real extent can be determined. He seems to suffer a great deal of pain, but there is a strong probability that he will recover. Dr. Matheny is the attending physician.

Dr. Stamets, who is attending Geo. Keister, says that although there was a compound fracture of the right leg in which the bone was badly shattered above the knee, he hopes to save the limb. Keister's other injuries will probably not prove very serious.

Connie Wolf is getting along nicely, Dr Baxter says, and was able to come to the table and eat breakfast. Should no unlooked for complications develop he will be all right again in a short time.

Fred Gouli, who sustained the fracture of several ribs and was considerably bruised, is reported by Dr. Nusbaum as doing fairly well today, and it is believed he will recover.

A Happy Occasion.

The marriage of Morris E. Boren to Dora Baughman took place at the home of Isaac Baughman in East Auburn last evening at 8 o'clock in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. After the ceremony, we were invited to the dining room and seated to a table loaded down with good things. A short time was spent in visiting when all took their leave for home, feeling that the evening was a happy occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Boren will in a short time move into their new home which he built during last summer on East Seventh street. Mr. Boren is an industrious and wide awake young man, saved his money and now has a beautiful home in which to begin married life. May other young men imitate his example. We join their friends in congratulations and hope they shall have a bright and prosperous future. J. D. Brosy was the officiating clergyman.

Faithful B. & O. Men.

(Garrett Clipper.)

There are many uniformed employes of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad who have spent the better part of their lives with the company, but very few people are aware of their length of service and devotion to duty that has made them valued men. Vice President and General Manager Underwood will shortly issue an order providing for service stripes for these men, that the public may know of their faithfulness and ability. A gold stripe will mean five years of service, and a silver stripe two years. Some of the Baltimore and Ohio conductors will be entitled from seven to nine gold stripes. The company will also furnish conductors, brakemen and baggaemen of all classes, with badges, so that they may be easily distinguished by those unfamiliar with the service.

A Literary Donation.

At the opening of the school year Mrs. Julia Hodge of of this city presented to the Auburn public school library about eighty volumes taken from her own private library. The books are texts on the sciences, mathematics, history, psychology and science of teaching, and a few which would be classed as general literature. The gift is much appreciated by the school authorities, making as it does, a nice addition to the number of books in the library, which now reach something over one thousand volumes. The gift shows wisdom on the part of the donor in choosing to place the books where they will be of most service, and a spirit worthy of emulation.

Their Wooden Wedding.

The fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Picker, jr., was celebrated at their home on South Jackson street last evening, at which time a number of guests were present, including several from out of town. Mr. and Mrs. Picker were the recipients of a number of useful and appropriate presents, and the guests present were served with a nice supper in five courses. It was a pleasant affair and we hope Mr. and Mrs. Picker may live to enjoy many more anniversaries. The guests from out of town were: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Reed, South Milford; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ferguson, of Angola: Maci Shreve and Bert Hoyles, Garrett.

(Worsaw Indianian.)

It has ceased to interest Warsaw people when Pete Evans is sent to jail for drunkenness, but Pete did an unusual thing the other day which has seldom been equaled in the annals of Indiana justice courts. He was before Justice Young on the old charge. He offered no defense, but made the unique request that he be fined heavily in order that his sojourn in jail might be sufficient to see him well and duly sober. When the 'squire made out the mittimus committing him to jail Pete broke all records by serving it on himself. He conveyed himself to the jail and turned himself over to the sheriff in due form.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in this country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamnick & Co., of Shelby, N, C. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed.

After several months of great suffering, during which everything possible was done for her relief, Mrs. W. D. Rickel passed away this morning at 8 o'clock at the home of her mother, Mrs. Hannah Draggoo, on south Main street, aged about thirty-nine years. Fine Figure

Many women lose their girlish forms after they become mothers. This is due to neglect. The figure can be preserved beyond question if the expectant mother will constantly use during the whole period of pregnancy. The earlier its use is begun, the more perfectly will the shape be preserved.

Mother's Friend not only softens and relaxes the muscles during the great strain before birth, but helps the skin to contract naturally afterward. It keeps unsightly wrinkles away, and the muscles underneath retain their pliability.

Mother's Friend is that famous external liniment which banishes morning sickness and nervousness during pregnancy; shortens labor and makes it nearly painless; builds up the patient's constitutional strength, so that she emerges from the ordeal without danger. The little one, too, shows the effects of Mother's Friend by its robustness and vigor.

A SAMPLE SUNDAY BEER PICNIC.

The Brewery workers had a picnic at Armstrong park yesterday and as has been hitherto the case with the Sunday picnics at Armstrong park this season there was a liberal patronage at the beer stands. During the afternoon several people went hunting for trouble and there was trouble—a very considerable volume of it.

Two overgrown boys, superinduced by the abundance of beer they had taken, began making dents in each other. Detectives Asche and Dugan, who had been detailed for duty at the park, interferred and attempted to quiet the disorder. One of the boys struck Acche with a club and the unexpected blow nearly brought the officer to his knees. At this Asche drew his mace and began using it on the young tough.

Then an unknown man ordered Asche not to hit the young fellow again Asche gave one more rap and was struck by the man. He then pulled his gun and he and Dugan covered the gang near them with their weapons. The man who struck Asche cried out, "your'e not game if you don't shoot," and Asche for a minute dropped his guns. Some one behind snatched the gun and slipped into the big crowd and disappeared.

Threats were made against the officers and complaints that Asche had used his mace too freely were indulged in by the gang. Finally through the efforts of several men the disorder for the time was quieted. but an ugly temper continued to prevail. Shortly after the episode mentioned four fights ocurred in as many different places on the grounds. One man was knocked down at the entrance and beat into insensibility by several rowdies, while another beery individual started trouble on a street car near the park and was promptly thrown into the ditch by the conductor and motorman.

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang ye, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER X.

The disagreeable weather of the past few days has materially reduced the muster roll of the House at the Band Stand. Besides the general tone of the discussion has not been as bright and cheery as usual.

They spent some time discussing the new death and burial law, and the older members object to it in toto. They say it has always been and still is, hard enough to face death, without having any new fangled and unnecessary attachments added to it. The Retired Doctor here quoted the substance of the law which takes effect Oct. 1.

"The law especially requires that no body shall be buried without a permit from a health officer and a fine of from $10 to $100 is provided for violations of the law. The law also requires that where a body is buried without a permit it shall be disinterred and an inquest shall be held by the coroner. No fee shall be charged for the permit. On the first of every month, reports shall be required from each health office, and the complete records will be preserved at the central office. Reports will be required from each health officer whether any death has taken place or not."

Now, what is the use of all this red tape, anyhow? Here we are, facing death, a subject by no means pleasant, be it made ever so easy. Now add to its unpleasant features, the fact that we can't even be buried till some one who don't care a bean for us, says we may be buried. Suppose I die way down in Newville township, and though, ordinarily I could be decently cared for with little delay or trouble, who knows but at the last moment, when my coffin is at the grave, some friend will call to mind, that they have no permit to bury me, until a man can hurry off to Auburn or some other place, and find the health officer, get a written permit and come back. All this while I am lying out there and getting so disgusted with the whole thing that I don't care a bean whether I am buried or not. And if I am buried without the permit, then I will have to be dug up again, like a pile of potatoes in the spring. Ugh!

The next step will be to make a law controlling the time, place, manner and conditions of birth. A health officer will need to be apprised of the prospect of another mortal, and summoned to see whether the mother is in proper health or whether the father knows enough to provide for and rear properly, the expected stranger. When these facts are settled a certificate by this health officer, will be needed before either father or mother can take any further steps in the matter. The whole business must come to a standstill until the majesty of the law shall be satisfied.

When at last, all has been made satisfactory, and the little stranger is "welcomed into the ranks of humanity," he must be wrapped in disinfected clothing, laid in a sterilized crib, fed on sterilized milk from a disinfected bottle in the hands of a sterilized nurse, drink only sterilized water from a sterilized glass, be washed in sterilized water with sterilized soap and a disinfected sponge and dried with a disinfected towel that has been washed at a disinfected laundry, ironed by sterilized flatirons, brought home by a disinfected boy in a sterilized basket with a disinfected cart.

But why pursue an endless subject further. And the Retired Doctor leaned back with a look on his face that showed "that tired feeling" we hear of.

And the House "divided," only to find two men in favor of the new law, with all the rest including "Mr. Speaker" opposed.

The coming session of the circuit court had a share of the general comment. No attorney being present they felt at liberty to discuss questions of vital interest to the Bar. Clients are likely to see the tables turned, and the lawyers put on trial. There are several of these cases—more than we have had in a quarter of a century. Three cases for disbarment are said to be on tap; and an attorney who gets disbarred can no longer practice law in the state and may even have trouble to get business in other states. Two attorneys have a chance to be hauled over the coals for keeping bad company, same as "poor dog Tray." Another one is likely to be sued for the return of property, which the other side contends he has no right to keep. It will make court lively to hear one attorney examine or cross examine another. And attorneys are usually poor witnesses any way.

Then they all went over to see how deep the water was in the power house cellar.

Accident at Kendallville.

When the running race was started on the fair ground at Kendallville yesterday one of the jockeys, a young man named Switzer from south of Ligonier, was riding a horse owned by a Mr. Hostetter of the latter place. He had started to limber the horse up a little and had gone up the track some distance and then came back to the stand. When near that point the horse suddenly "bucked" and threw the rider, who had not expected such a thing, clear over his head and onto the hard track. Switzer was picked up for dead under the belief that his neck had been broken, but he soon after showed signs of life and was taken up town. Herb Weaver, who saw the accident, believes the man seriously injured, in fact he may die, though nothing definite was known of his condition when Mr. Weaver left the city. A second jockey was put on the horse and again the animal tried to throw its rider by bucking; but the rider staid on and the infuriated horse then threw himself in order to get rid of the rider. It seemed as if he wanted to fall on the rider, but the man escaped. The horse was then taken off the track and the race went on without him.

Mrs. W. D. Rickel.

Laura Ellen Cadwallader, daughter of Mrs. Hannah Draggoo, fell asleep Thursday morning, after a long affliction with Bright's disease.

It was a great comfort to her to have the privilege of spending the last months of her life with her mother, and a great pleasure for the mother to minister to her daughter in everything possible to her comfort. The great compensation is the consciousness of having done all for her restoration and comfort within their power.

Mrs. Rickel was born May 8, 1860. She joined the Methodist church in Auburn when about sixteen years old, under the pastorate of J. M. Welch. Soon after her marriage to William D. Rickel, which occurred January 1, 1878, they moved to Rochester, where they lived for ten years. Subsequently they returned to Auburn, and lived here until about four years ago, when they moved to Albany, Indiana. When sickness came with the prospect of long duration they came to her mother's, where she lingered till death came as a relief.

A dutiful and faithful wife; a loving and lovable daughter; an indulgent and kind mother, a good woman, patient, tender and affectionate—her husband and daughter have a precious memory. Her mother, brother and many friends mourn her seemingly untimely death. The angels guard her sleeping dust.

Frank Rempis.

The COURIER said yesterday that Mr. Rempis was at Fort Wayne, to see if the bullet in his neck could be located by the X-ray process. This morning's Journal-Gazette gives the results:

Frank Rempis of Waterloo was accidently injured about four weeks ago while hunting. His gun was prematurely exploded and the bullet lodged in his spinal column. Dr. F. Broughton was called to attend the man, and the bullet was located and removed.

The wound did not heal quickly, and it was decided to bring Mr. Rempis to this city, so that the X rays could be used on him. He was brought to town yesterday and taken to the office of Dr. G. W. McCaskey. The Roentgen rays were used on him yesterday afternoon, and last night Dr. McCaskey stated that the trouble was located.

It was found that the spinal cord was affected. By means of the X-rays the doctors were enabled to learn the exact nature of the trouble, and last night Dr. Broughton returned to Waterloo with Mr. Rempis, who will be given a course of treatment to do away with the effects of the shot.

Indian Tax Suit.

Gabriel Godfrey, son of a chief of the Miami tribe of Indians, in Miami county has filed an appeal in the supreme court in an attempt to restrain the commissioners and treasurer of Miami county from collecting taxes on his land, holding that it is a reservation made in an original grant by the government.

He Fooled The Surgeons.

All doctors told Renic Hamilton, of West Jefferson, O., after suffering 18 months from Rectal Fistula, he would die unless a costly operation was performed; but he cured himself with five boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the surest Pile cure on Earth, and the best Salve in the World. 25 cents a box. EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

A BIG LOSS.

The Old Union Depot at Cincinnati Wiped Out by Fire.

Fire was discovered in the Big Four warehouse, occupying a block bounded by Central avenue, Pearl, Plum and Second streets, Cincinnati. A general alarm soon called the whole department to the scene as the fire rapidly spread to other railway buildings, including the freight sheds, where forty loaded freight cars were burned and thirty that were not loaded. Some passenger coaches were also badly damaged in the yards. The warehouse, where the fire started, was formerly used as a union passenger station, and is just across the street from the new passenger station, which was so badly damaged that no morning trains could leave that place. The approaches to the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad bridges were also badly damaged. The loss is estimated at over a million dollars, but it will be some time before the extent of the loss in the sheds and yards can be known. The guests of the Grand Hotel and smaller hostelries in the vicinity of the depots were greatly alarmed.

Indians Find Missing Men.

Duluth (Minn.) special: A report from Port Arthur says that H. F. Kendall of Cambridge, Mass., and C. E. Eastman of Saginaw, Mich., who have been lost in the woods near the Nepijon River since September 17, have been found. The sufferings of the two men during this time are reported as indescribable. They were without matches, guns or any shelter but blankets for ten days and had no food but berries, bark and what fish they could catch, which they ate without cooking. They were in the vast wilderness north of Lake Superior and west of the Nepijon River. A score of Indians have been searching for them.

Boers Wait for Rain.

A dispatch from Cape Tawn says: "The Boers would have taken the initiative by now but for the scarcity of water, the rains not being sufficient. Probably there will be great difficulties in providing food supplies for the people remaining at Johannesburg after hostilities have commenced. Several responsible people here who have long clung to the belief in an ultimate peaceful settlement, now regard war as inevitable.

A Suicide.

James Brooks, the founder of New London, the oldest town in Howard County, Indiana, suicided by jumping from a third-story window at the County House, of which he had been an inmate for several years. He was 93 years old. He worried over being a county charge, and as he leaped to his death he remarked: "Here's for a better land." He was formerly quite well off financially.

Mother and Child Drowned.

An infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Stanley, living on the Reynolds farm, near Franklin, Mich., fell into a large cistern. Mrs. Stanley jumped into the cistern and attempted to save the child, but both were drowned before help arrived. Mr. Stanley left home at 4 o'clock and returned an hour later and discovered the tragedy.

Girls in a Panic.

Two hundred and fifty girls were thrown into a panic at Chicago during a fire which caused a loss of $60,000 to the stock and building of Charles F. Gunther, confectioner, besides destroying some relics of great value. Fifteen of the young women were forced to make their escape by ladders, while the others fled down the stairways.

To Succeed Reed.

The Republican District Convention, in session at Portland, Maine, nominated as Congressman Reed's successor his former private secretary, Amos L. Allen. The platform reaffirms the platforms of the last National and State Conventions and approves President McKinley's Philippine policy.

A Farmer Shoots Himself.

PRICES RETAIN THEIR STRENGTH.

Upward Tendency in Cereals, Cotton, Petroleum, Iron and Steel.

Bradstreet's says: "Satisfactory trade and price conditions apparently still reign. So few, in fact, are the reports of poor trade that favorable reports may be said to be almost unanimous. An expanded volume of fall trade is indicated by the aggregate of bank clearings for the week, though reports from some markets point to the greatest rush being over. Prices as a rule maintain all their former strength, decreases being few and relatively unimportant. In several lines, notably the cereals, cotton, petroleum, iron and steel, the tendency is toward higher levels. Cotton has been notably strong and active. Wool is higher at London and sympathetically strong here, and expectations of a good export trade for fine grades of domestics are entertained. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 4,630,765 bushels, against 4,536,552 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,794,965 bushels, against 3,282,751 bushels last week. Failures for the week have been 154 in the United States, against 173 last year, and 18 in Canada, against 16 last year."

At night when the curtain went up she stepped upon the stage and as she did so more words passed between the two. She then deliberately stepped back into the wings and pulled from the folds of her dress a revolver. Three shots were fired and Leiden fell face forward on the stage in the presence of the horrified audience. The shots took effect in the victim's head.

Besides this sum there were many thousands of dollars kept in the wardrobes, in stockings or between the leaves of books. NAVY ADOPTS THE NEW RIFLE.

Krag-Jorgensen Will Be Used by Sea and Land Fighters.

The Navy Department has concluded to make a change in the small arms used in the service and will adopt the army rifle, or what is known as the Krag-Jorgensen. This determination has been reached solely as the result of the findings of the board, which held that the importance of having a uniform arm and ammunition for both the army and navy overshadowed all other considerations. The navy uses only 20,000 guns, while the army calls for at least 100,000, and, as the latter could not make a change in the midst of war, the navy will be obliged to do so.

DEWEY IN NEW YORK

Cruiser Olympia Arrives Two Days Ahead of Time.

BIG WELCOME BEGINS.

News of Unexpected Arrival Causes Fever of Excitement.

Calculators Thought the Hero Was 600 Miles Away When He Was Within Gunshot of His Native Land—Admiral and All on Board Reported Well—Signal Men Are Kept Busy Answering the Salutes of Welcome.

Admiral Dewey Tuesday morning treated the nation to another surprise. With the United States cruiser Olympia, flagship of the fleet that won the victory of Manila bay, he quietly sailed into New York bay at 7 o'clock in the morning, nearly sixty hours ahead of time. The famous cruiser was first sighted off the coast shortly before 6 o'clock. At 7:04 she passed in at Sandy Hook, and half an hour later she anchored in the lower bay.

"WELCOME, ADMIRAL!"

While Admiral Dewey and the Olympia were reported by "expert" calculators to be about 600 miles off New York City they were almost within gunshot. It was the admiral's failure to touch at Bermuda that left everybody in doubt as to his course and his whereabouts. His early arrival is taken as further proof of the "Dewey way" to be on time.

All the morning, as the cruiser lay at anchor, her signalman was kept busy dipping the ensign in answer to the welcome of passing vessels. An orderly came ashore from the Olympia soon after she had anchored, with dispatches and messages from the admiral and officers.

New Yorkers Tuesday knew how Admiral Montejo and his sailors must have felt that May morning, more than a year ago, when Dewey appeared in Manila bay, days ahead of the time the Spaniards had bargained for. The reception committee had asked the admiral to reach New York by Thursday, Sept. 28. He replied that he would be there by that time, and the people, knowing he would keep his word, expected that he would hover off the coast and then come in and drop anchor at the stated time. His arrival, therefore, was a shock. But the people got over it quickly and went to work with renewed vigor to prepare for the reception to the nation's hero.

It was eleven minutes to 6 Tuesday morning when the sleepy marine observers at Sandy Hook saw a trim-looking American man-of-war looming up in the mist off the lightship, seven miles off shore. They keep tab on all of Uncle Sam's ships and knew that no cruiser was due at New York that day. Meantime the ship drew nearer, and soon her signals, denoting that she was the Olympia, were discernible. The news was quickly flashed to the city and then transmitted all over the country. By 7 o'clock the famous sea fighter had drawn close to shore and a few minutes later she crossed the bar. She proceeded about a mile and a half up the bay, inside the Hook.

Wednesday morning Admiral Dewey and his men were early astir on the Olympia. At an early hour a number of tugs and chartered boats filled with patriotic Americans hovered about the Olympia ready to cheer and wave flags at the slightest provocation.

It was 9 o'clock when the Olympia's anchor was stripped, and five minutes later the graceful warship was under way. Her progress up the bay was one continuous ovation. Whistles were blown and flags dipped by passing craft as the Olympia moved up the bay and through the narrows. To the shores of Staten Island and Long Island people flocked in hundreds to get a view of the Olympia, and, if possible, a fleeting glimpse of her commander.

When the Olympia took her station at the head of the fleet at Tompkinsville bedlam broke loose. The entire fleet fired an admiral's salute of seventeen guns, and for twenty minutes the air was filled with smoke and thunder. The jackies on the ships of Sampson, which had annihilated Cervera's squadron at Santiago, crowded to the rails, and for some minutes cheered the sailors of the Olympia, who had helped to sink Montejo's fleet in Manila bay. The Olympia tars responded in kind. It was the greeting of the navy to the navy.

THE CRUISER OLYMPIA, ADMIRAL DEWEY'S FLAGSHIP.

Dies in Hospital Fire.

St. Vincent's hospital at Norfolk, Va., was burned to the ground at 2 o'clock Thursday morning. One woman was burned to death and two persons are missing. A nurse, Mrs. Dolan, was severely injured. The financial loss is estimated at $200,000.

All the secret mobilization papers of the second Bavarian army corps have been stolen from an iron chest. A sergeant named Schlosser is suspected.

Elias Hatfield, Wilmington, W. Va., was found guilty of manslaughter in killing H. E. Ellis. Sentence will be from five to eighteen years.

INTERVIEW WITH DEWEY.

Ridicules the Idea of His Being a Presidential Candidate.

Admiral Dewey is reserved in what he says, but he is discreet without being timid. In reply to questions about his presidential aspirations and Gen. Otis' policy he said: "I am not a politician, I am a sailor. My training has all been that way. I know my business, or at least should know it, and I do not want to mix up in the affairs of government. I am perfectly satisfied to live and die a simple sailor, who tried to do his duty. I cannot make a speech even.

"Gen. Otis has tried to do too much. I told him so. He wants to be general, governor, judge and everything else—to have hold of all the irons. No man can do this.

"The fight in the Philippines should be easily ended. Do I think the Filipinos are fit for self-government? Well, no, not just now. They probably will be in a little time. It is my candid opinion that they are more fitted for it than the Cubans; that they are a better people than the Cubans in every way."

THE DEWEY ARCH.

When told that he had been suggested to lead the Democratic ticket with Gen. Wheeler as a running mate, the admiral said: "Well, we should make a pretty mess of it. Gen. Wheeler, of course, has some training in the political school, but then he is a West Pointer. I had forgotten that. He would want to run everything as he would a regiment and, of course, would make a splendid mess of it. You cannot run a government as you would a regiment."

When told that his son had said he was a pronounced Republican, the admiral laughed and said his son knew about as much about it as the Olympia.

There is heartiness and health in every gesture of the famed sea fighter. He has the quiet, courtly manner that stamps the man of the world, and the vigor that characterizes the sailor. His face has the bronze inevitable after thirteen months' exposure to the tropical sun of Manila bay. Dewey's eyes are of hazel brown, and sparkle when he is talking enthusiastically. His voice is strong and clear. The admiral dresses as immaculately as ever. His appearance corresponds with that of the flagship.

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S FUTURE.

Will Be Needed in Washington During Session of Philippine Commission.

Admiral Dewey is to be formally detached from the Olympia. The flagship will then proceed to Boston, where she will be placed out of commission and receive an overhauling. The admiral will not be assigned to duty until he has been consulted on the subject. The President and the Secretary of the Navy will ascertain his desires. While the action of the Navy Department will be dependent on the wishes of the admiral, President McKinley and Secretary Long have certain plans concerning him to which he will hardly object. When the Philippines commission assembles in November, Admiral Dewey's presence at the meeting will be necessary, as he is one of its members. It is probable that the commission will remain in Washington during most if not all of the coming session of Congress.

Admiral Dewey will reach the retiring age on Dec. 26, but as the law leaves it optional with him whether to retire or not he will, it is believed, prefer to remain on the active list. It is said that the present intention of the Navy Department is to assign Admiral Dewey to duty as the confidential advisor of the Secretary of the Navy on naval affairs. The admiral will have as much leave as he desires.

PORAC IS CAPTURED.

General MacArthur Enters City After Half-Hour's Fighting.

A general advance of the American troops against the Filipino stronghold at Porac was begun early Thursday morning, and Gen. MacArthur entered the town after half an hour's fighting. The American loss was slight and the insurgent loss is not known. The enemy fled northward. When the Americans entered the town they found it practically deserted.

GEN. MACARTHUR.

The attacking party moved on Porac in two columns. The Ninth infantry, with two guns from Santa Rita was commanded by Gen. Wheeler, and the Thirty-sixth infantry, under Col. Bell, with one gun, accompanied Gen. MacArthur from San Antonio. Both columns struck the town at 9 o'clock and opened a brisk fire, which was replied to by the enemy for half an hour. Then the insurgents fled, and the Americans marched over their trenches and took possession of the place.

The movement was a strategical success, and resulted in the possession of Porac and the clearing of several miles of country thereabout. The insurgents are estimated to have numbered 600 men. Ten dead Filipinos were found and the captain and commissary of Mascarno's command were taken prisoners. The American loss was five killed, but there were many prostrations from the heat.

Porac is a town of about 3,000 inhabitants, and is fourteen miles from Cacolor, the capital of Pampanga province. It is about four miles west of the railroad line running north from Manila, and between Santa Rita and Angeles, through to the southwest of the latter, and northwest of Santa Rita.

NAVAL HERO WEDS.

Dora Havemeyer and Lieut Cameron Winslow Joined at Newport.

One of the most charming house weddings ever celebrated in high life at Newport, R. I., was when Miss Dora Havemeyer, daughter of Theodore Havemeyer, was married to Lieut. Cameron McK. Winslow, flag lieutenant of the North Atlantic squadron. Several ships of the fleet were at Newport and many of the officers attended the ceremony.

Miss Havemeyer is pretty, talented and possesses a nice fortune of her own besides being an heiress to a good share of the millions of America's sugar king. Lieut. Winslow has risen rapidly in his branch of the service and promises to some day stand high in the navy. The wedding journey was brief, as Lieut. Winslow had to report to Admiral Sampson to take part in the Dewey celebration.

Telegraphic communication between Calcutta and Darjeeling has been reestablished, but railroad traffic beyond Kurseong is not likely to be resumed for a long time. The road is impassable for horses, and travelers are only able to journey on foot and with much difficulty.

ADVANCE IN FARM TOOLS.

Agricultural Implement Makers Boost Prices 25 Per Cent.

Prices of agricultural implements were advanced 25 per cent Monday by joint agreement of forty-one manufacturers at the meeting of the Northwestern Plow and Implement Association in Chicago. The increase was based on the quotations of implements made on Aug. 1. It is expected to affect only next year's contracts, but fear was expressed that retailers would advance prices immediately. The advance was made because of radical increases in the price of steel and iron, and it is thought probable that a still further advance will be made at the next meeting of the association on Nov. 1.

Last spring a tramp, about 21, called at the home of Rev. W. T. McGowan, North Vernon, and was given food by his 15-year-old daughter. There was a few minutes' conversation, and since that time the tramp and the girl have been carrying on a secret correspondence. The last letter said that he had prepared a home for her near New Orleans, and, later, he went after her. The father learned of their intentions, and stood guard at his door with a gun. The tramp said he would stay until he secured his intended bride, as she was willing to go, but when citizens took up the matter he left with tears in his eyes, saying he would return and take her. THE STOLEN KISS.

The hammock hung between the trees,
The maiden fair
Lay in it with her eyelids closed—
He saw her there.

With wildly beating heart he stole
Up to her side
And softly to her ripe, red lips
His own applied.

He kissed her—kissed the gentle maid,
So fair, so sweet,
And with a tumult in his breast
Beat a retreat.

At length she slowly straightened up,
With open eyes:
"He took but one," she said and sighed
A lot of sighs.

Little Kittie Kenyon.

WHEN Tom Ainslie's cousin Maud announced her engagement to Williams, the rich leatherman's son, every one gasped and then said: "Wonder how Tom likes it?"

Tom wondered a little himself. He had long been devoted to his cousin Maude, ever since he could remember, in fact, and he had always had a vague idea that at some indefinite time they might "make it a go together." It would have been a convenient thing for them both, for she would have brought Clifton back into the family, and Tom had the money she lacked.

"But I wasn't worth while," sighed Tom to himself, pityingly, leaning back in his chair and stretching his long legs toward the fire. "I'm surprised that I don't feel worse. Always was fond of Maudie, and it would have been a nice thing all around. Hope Williams is al right for her. Always fancied the beggar myself. And it seems I'm the best man. Beastly nuisance; all girls and frocks and wedding cake. I'll have to go through with it, though, for Maudie's sake. And little Kittie Kenyon is to be maid of honor. She has never been decent to me; seems to bear me a grudge. Little Kitty Kenyon," and Tom sighed again and puffed his cigarette.

The wedding was to take place at once, and a church rehearsal, with a supper at the bride's home, had been planned for the evening before. Tom arrived at the last moment, just in time to reach the altar as the procession came up the church. First the ushers, then the six bridemaids, who walked stiffly, as if with the weight of nations on their shoulders. Tom's eyes twinkled as he watched. On they came, these pretty girls, sobered beyond their usual wont.

"First time in her life Elsie Yates hasn't danced along," Tom thought. "That Ashton girl is so ugly. Oh, by Jove——" Tom's eyes were fastened upon the small figure of a girl walking alone. Such a pretty girl, with great black eyes, that sparkled, and such a graceful girl, swaying slightly in time to the stately music. She glanced up as she neared him, and a demure look of exaggerated pity came into her eyes. Then she had passed him, and taken her place near the bride.

"Little wretch," thought Tom, biting his lips. "I always seem to strike her as a joke."

The short rehearsal was over, and Tom was walking down from the altar with the tiny maid of honor at his side.

"You're so far away I can hardly make you hear me, Miss Kenyon. I have attempted it three times, and you are utterly oblivious."

She glanced up at him quickly.

"Oh, no, only sad, Mr. Ainslie. I am so sorry for you. You bear up so wonderfully well, too. If you want to cry a little, walk behind that pillar, and I'll excuse you to the rest. Just for three minutes, No? Don't need it? You can stand it a trifle longer?"

"What have I ever done to you, Miss Kenyon? I'm an innocent individual who never did you any knowing harm. Will not your kind and pitying heart speak for one who is only anxious to let you walk on him? And who only succeeds in rousing your nasty, evil little temper?" said Tom in a distinctly melodramatic manner.

She looked at him serenely for an instant. "Stuff and nonsense," she said, and ran off to Maudie, who was calling her.

He managed to secure the chair next hers at supper, though Sheldon had his hand upon the back of it, and scowled darkly at Tom when he sat down. Miss Kenyon looked up with a little smile.

"Oh, so you are feeling kinder toward me now, are you not?" he said, bending over her with the devoted air he had toward women. "Because I want to ask you a question, and I want you to answer it seriously. You will? Well, why do you not like me?"

The girl gave him a curious little glance and her lashes fluttered for a moment. Then she answered, looking straight at him:

"You have too much of the 'conquering hero' air about you."

"I didn't know that," said Tom, meekly. "Can't you help me to change it? Because I like you, you know," in a low voice, "very, very much."

He was staring at her very hard, and saw the rose tint deepen in her cheek. She turned her shoulder toward him.

"Mr. Sheldon," she called, "you are neglecting me shamefully. Won't you come over here beside me? Mr. Ainslie is just leaving." She glanced at Tom out of the corner of her eyes.

Ainslie got up instantly, looked at her a moment, then with a quick bow crossed the room to his cousin. "Sorry, Maudie, but I must be leaving. Williams, I'll see about those tickets." And he was gone.

Sheldon sat down with a radiant smile, but after a few moments his face clouded, and the radiant smile was gone. Miss Kenyon evidently did not feel like talking.

All the next day Tom could not get her out of his mind. He was angry. "The impudence of her," he thought to himself, resolved to ignore her completely. But when he stood with the bridegroom in the big church that afternoon, and saw her coming toward him in her lovely white frock, his heart gave a queer little turn and then seemed to stand still. In the quick glance he had of her he thought she looked a little pale, but so pretty, so wonderfully pretty. As she passed by him she looked up at him a moment, but Tom's eyes were fixed above her head and he never glanced at her.

All during the reception and supper it was the same. His eyes never seemed to rest upon her, although he was wildly aware of Sheldon's devotion.

But after the excitement of the bride's departure had died away, and almost all but the house party had gone, Tom came up to her as she stood talking to Sheldon. His manner was as cool as it well could be.

ELECTRIC GUN.

"May I see you a moment, Miss Kenyon?" he said quietly, looking at Sheldon.

"Mr. Sheldon will excuse me?" said the girl, which Sheldon did, with as pleasant an expression as he could muster.

They walked through the long drawing room to the little rose reception room under the stairs. It was quite deserted.

"I wish to apologize, Miss Kenyon, if I offended you last night. It is perhaps needless to assure you that it was unintentional. Will you pardon me?" He stood before her very stiff and straight and with his blonde head well up.

The girl was picking a rose to pieces. Her fingers trembled a little.

"I am sorry if I was rude to you last night," she said. "I assure you it was quite intentional on my part, but I was very sorry after I had done it."

Tom moved quickly. "Do you care for that fellow," he said, "Sheldon?"

"No," she whispered, her eyes downcast.

He hesitated a moment.

"Could you ever care for me, little one?" he asked, wistfully. "Because—you know I love you, dear. So much—so much. I can't let you be so hard to me," and his voice broke a little. "Couldn't you try to love me just a little?"

She looked up with a mischievous little smile.

"You are not the least little bit of a 'Conquering Hero' now," she said, and he took her into his arms.

Mr. Sheldon did not attend the wedding.—New York Mail and Express.

How Snakes Travel.

A little knot of deputies at the custom-house were talking about snakes. "I have never seen a satisfactory explanation of their motion," said one of the party. "The text book theory that they get over the ground by fanning their ribs back and forth would never be accepted by anybody who has seen a coach whip or blueracer in full flight. Where I was raised, in North Louisiana, coach whip snakes were common and I have frequently watched them. When not alarmed the snake glides along with about two-thirds of its body extended on the ground and the head and neck raised in a graceful curve, like the prow of a ship. There is something indescribably smooth and swanlike in its progress and all the motion perceptible is a slight ripple along the spine. But the moment the coach whip is frightened it presents quite a different picture. The head is instantly lowered and the whole body stretches out as straight as a ramrod. Everything about it suggests speed, and it skims over the ground like an arrow from a bow. How it does it is a mystery. I suppose, as a matter of fact, that the operation is immensely subtle and complicated and that the motion is derived from a series of writhing and contractions, but if so they are so slight and so swift that the human eye cannot follow them. I have studied the snakes in flight time and again and I could never see that they deviated a fraction of an inch from a straight line."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

For Want of a Comma.

A British service journal recently spoke, in referring to a marriage, of the bride as "the daughter of Sir Hector O'Dowd, commanding the Boolah Ghah district and Lady O'Dowd."

Whereupon Lady O'Dowd wrote to say that there was some mistake about this, as she was quite sure that in the domestic circle it was she who commanded.

ELECTRIC GUN.

Wonderful Invention of a Young Genius of the British Isles.

The noiseless and smokeless electric gun invented by Mr. Newman, a young apprentice at Whitehead's torpedo factory, England, exists at present only in the tiny model weighing seven pounds, which is figured in accompanying illustration. With this small weapon, however, the inventor has made very satisfactory experiments, shattering a target at a distance of a mile and also at five miles range. The gun has a very high muzzle velocity. It is said that the inventor has refused an offer of $275,000 from the British Admiralty for his invention. Meanwhile, he is carefully guarding his secret while he constructs a model weighing 100 weight. Mr. Newman is the son of a Portland grocer. His genius has developed early, for he is still in his 20th year.

TAKES SAMPSON'S PLACE.

Rear Admiral Farquhar to Command North Atlantic Squadron.

The successor of Rear Admiral Sampson as commander of the North Atlantic squadron upon his retirement will be Rear Admiral Norman von Heidreich Farquhar. Admiral Farquhar can show a record in the service of his country that any man might well be proud of, for it covers a period of forty years and embraces many instances of bravery and clear-headedness in the time of danger.

He was born in Pennsylvania April 11, 1840, and early showed a liking for a seafaring life. He was sent to the Naval Academy, graduating in 1859 and going at once to the coast of Africa to assist in breaking up the slave trade. During the civil war he was with the North Atlantic blockading squadron as lieutenant. He became lieutenant commander in 1865, and commander in 1872 and captain in 1886.

When the frightful hurricane swept over Apia, in Samoa, March 16, 1889, demolishing even the most powerful vessels in the harbor by throwing them with tremendous force against the rocks and causing the loss of hundreds of lives, he was in command of the Trenton at the Pacific station. Capt. Farquhar's splendid seamanship and presence of mind were shown very strikingly on this occasion, for he extricated his vessel from the harbor and put to sea without losing a man of his crew of 450, while all about him vessels were being wrecked and men drowned by the hundreds. The Massachusetts Humane Society awarded him a medal for his gallant conduct.

He was made a member of the Lighthouse Board, and later appointed chief of the bureau of yards and docks in the Navy Department.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

"HAULING DOWN THE FLAG."

Republican politicians who are "crooking the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning" are loud in their protests that the American flag once run up must never be hauled down. This appeal to the bias of patriotism is made to excuse the war in the Philippines.

But not all Republicans are so bound to the imperial throne of Emperor McKinley as to approve an unjust war simply because the President is moved by an unworthy ambition. Former Senator Henderson of Missouri is an able Republican, but he has ideas of his own concerning "hauling down the flag." "I don't believe," says the former Senator, "that you can drive a people to fall in love with anything or that you can shoot American patriotism into anybody. When the American flag ceases to be the emblem of liberty let it be hauled down. I know of but one flag, and that is the one which proudly floats 'o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.' It will never float gracefully over a land of slaves."

But, worse than this, the flag in Sulu guarantees not only slavery, but polygamy as well. In further discussing this question, Henderson says: "I would now negotiate with the Filipinos to take Manila as a naval station and then help them to establish a republic of their own, the United States agreeing to aid them in the good work and to protect them from any threatened interefrence with their free institutions, they to return to us the $20,000,000 which Spain received from us on a defective title."

"Has it been a dood little Willie whi le Uncle Mark was gone?"—New York World.

This proposition coming from a Republican is given here for what it is worth. It simply illustrates that Mark Hanna is much mistaken when he asserts that there is no political issue in the Philippine question. Not only is there a political issue in this question, but there is also a cause for differences of opinion among leading Republicans. Nobody wants to dishonor the flag, but no one dishonors it more than he who would make it a protector of slavery and savagery.—Chicago Democrat.

Hanna an Imitator.

After all Mr. Hanna has no particular cause to be abashed at the story that he solicitously inquired how much a vote was worth in the House of Commons. For even if Mr. Hanna did ask the question—and he declares he didn't—he does not suffer in comparison with the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, who, though Minister for the Colonies, admits that he owns stock in the Niger company, a concern which is trying to sell out to the imperial government. The British ministry, indeed, are a particularly thick-skinned crowd in matters of this kind. It is not very long since Sir Michael Hicks-Beach—"Mickey the Botch"—admitted that most of the ministers were interested in gun foundries, shipyards and other enterprises which have large dealings with the government, and defended the procedure upon the ground that the statesmen found relaxation and relief from the cares of state in looking after their business interests! All of which goes to show that politicians are very much alike on both sides of the water, and that Mr. Hanna, though he may be somewhat more direct in his methods, is not, after all, much worse than his esteemed contemporaries of Downing street and Westminster.—Chicago Chronicle.

What Is a "Foreign Revolt?"

"The anti-imperialists have achieved the unenviable distinction of having prolonged a foreign revolt against the flag of their country," says the New York Mail and Express. Now, what most people would like to know is how there can be a "foreign revolt" against the flag of the United States. If the Filipinos are American subjects they are in revolt against the flag under which they are, or should be, living. If they are not American subjects then they cannot revolt against the flag of another country.—Butte Miner.

Bay State Will Lead.

The Democrats of Ohio, Nebraska, Kentucky and several other States have already demanded the renomination of William J. Bryan in party platforms, but old Massachusetts will probably be the first commonwealth to elect a delegation pledged to support him in the next national convention. The proposal to elect delegates this fall appears to be favorably regarded by the Bay State Democracy, and that they will be instructed in the Nebraskan's favor there is not the slightest doubt.—Concord People and Patriot.

A Hot Time in Ohio.

There is going to be a hot time in McKinley's own State of Ohio during the next six weeks. A Republican majority must be secured there on the 7th of November or the second term syndicate's plans will go to smash, and with them Hannism, Algerism, Imperialism, Militarism and Trustism. Theodore Roosevelt has been called upon to help and he has thrown himself into the fray in his usual reckless way. The Administration is evidently frightened by the outlook.

Roosevelt's speech at Akron was a most virulent attack on the Democratic party, on William J. Bryan and on everybouy who will not stand for the policy of loot for the trusts and syndicates and offices for the incompetents and scamps. He disdained argument altogether and confined himself to slangwhanging of the most pronounced Billingsgate sort—those who oppose McKinley's policy are traitors who ought to be shot or tied to the tail of a wild horse.

What effect this sort of talk will have on the Ohio farmers to whom it was addressed is a problem. They are an independent, open-minded, reasoning class of men as a rule, and they may conclude that it must be a weak cause which has to call to its aid abuse of this sort. Perhaps they have had enough of this swash-buckling and will decide for the good, old-fashioned form of settling political disputes by means of argument rather than by roaring.

Ohio was carried by McKinley three years ago by a plurality of over 47,000 in a total vote of more than a million. The Republican candidate for Governor this year is unpopular with a large section of his party, Foraker's followers included, and the latter's championship of the cause of the trusts may have been decided on for the purpose of defeating the ticket and administering to both the President and Hanna a lesson.—New York News.

Only One Chapter.

It is a mistake to think that the solution of the problem of the Philippines involves nothing but the defeat of Aguinaldo and his army. The arrest of the native mayors of two cities within our lines—who had been elected in accordance with our policy of conciliation—the one for spying and the other for maintaining an insurgent recruiting office, serves to show that the native population is practically unanimous in its sympathy with the rebellion. After we shall have whipped Aguinaldo we shall probably be obliged to subdue in detail every village in the group.—Philadelphia Record.

We Bought a Spanish Peace.

The "treachery" of Filipinos who have been trusted by the Americans and the arrest of several native mayors is a fair indication of the kind of peace that may be expected to prevail in the Philippines after McKinley succeeds in pacifying the Filipinos with his "gunpowder gospel." It will be a volcanic peace that will become eruptive every time the American carpet-baggers on guard turn their backs. The Spaniards had just such "peace" in the island for 200 years.—Mansfield Shield.

Not Wealth, but Its Abuse.

The mere possession of great wealth by an individual is no longer a matter of apprehension. An illegal combination to monopolize the production or distribution of the necessaries of life is another matter. An active and unscrupulous trust promoter or a corrupt and corrupting plutocrat in politics is a more serious menace to the welfare of the country than all the Vanderbilts and Astors put together.—New York World.

Snooper—Certainly it is. The baby of fifty years ago is half a century old now.—Tit-Bits.

Old Sumptuary Laws.

The sumptuary laws that were passed in the Middle Ages are quite foreign to the spirit and temper of the nineteenth century. They aimed at keeping each within his proper sphere, by fixing limits to the expenditure of citizens upon apparel and other personal concerns. A complete schedule of the clothing that should be worn in every class of society was prescribed in the act of the third year of Edward IV. (1464). Apparently an excess in attire sprang up that had not been provided for in this act, for another one followed in the ensuing year, prohibiting the wearing of shoes with long-peaked toes. The pictures of the people of the Elizabethan age depict what many would consider an artistic taste in apparel, but which was looked upon at that time as an excess, and called for a proclamation (1580) against broad ruffs, long cloaks and swords, and long spikes on the bosses of shields.—The Cornhill.

LAYING FIELD TELEGRAPH WIRE TO SAN FERNANDO, IN THE PHILIPPINES.

There was one department of the army, not of the line, nor exactly of the staff, that did not fail in any emergency in the war with Spain and in the subsequent war we are waging in the Philippines. That was the Signal Corps. In Cuba, in Porto Rico and in the Philippines, the signal men and officers covered themselves with glory. The field telegraph followed close to the firing line, and the general in the rear could keep in touch with the center and both wings of his force, and having the best of information from all parts, he could give his orders intelligently. It requires even more nerve to lay telegraph lines under fire than to fight under fire.

Cuban Monopoly.

There is a great deal of complaint, esdecially in the south and east where easy and cheap communication with Cuba is a matter of great importance over the action and claims of the Western Union Telegraph Company which owns the only line of cable between this country and that island. Other companies are seeking the privilege of landing and operating a cable there, but are at once met with the claims of the Union, that their charter excludes any other company from operating a line there. This monopoly gives them a chance to charge high prices, which would at once come down in case a competing line could be laid As we said, it hits the hardest along the seacoast cities and such is the feeling that it may eventually get into the U. S. courts. It should also be noted that the Commercial Cable Co., of Cuba asks no bonus from either our goverment or that of Cuba, but will bind themselves in writing to place their line at the service of the government and let the latter fix its own rates. They also give the government the first chance to buy them out in case they ever sell. Yet, the late Secretary of War, Alger, refused to let the new company land their line on the island.

A Long Fight Ended.

After nearly five years of hard fighting, in which every artifice known to bright lawyers was brought into use, the celebrated case of Kelley vs the Wabash railroad company has at last been finally decided. As many of our readers remember, Frank Kelley, an employe of the Wabash, had one of his legs badly injured in an accident. He was taken to the company hospital at Peru, where he nearly lost his life through the bungling work of the surgeon then in charge. He was awarded $6,500 damages, and the railroad company promptly carried the case to the supreme court, where about a year ago the judgment of the lower aourt was confirmed. The attorneys for the road asked for a rehearing, and yesterday this was denied. This settles the matter and Mr. Kelley will now receive the amount of the original judgment with interest added, in all about $8,000. His attorneys, who have made a hard fight, were Judge Roby, J. F. Shuman and D. M. Link, while the interests of the company were looked after by Stuart and Hammond of Lafayette and J. E. and J. H. Rose of this city.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP ?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the most severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the only remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup.,' It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle. many years by all druggists in the world. Sample bottles at O. P. RABER'S, Corunna.

W. J. S.

"Boast not thyself" the wise man said of old;
Tomorrow? nay, what may tomorrow bring?
Life is a vapor." Hope dies daily here,
And change is written on each earthly thing.

"Good by," he said, and once again, "good by!"
So to his work, as was his wont, he passed.
Young, strong, and hopeful, life seemed all before,
How should they dream those farewells were his last.

The sun was rising, beautiful and clear—
When suddenly, upon the quiet day
Came terror, and distress and loss, and pain,
And in the midst a lifeless body lay.

Happy the heart that knows and trusts its God.
The sweetness of that trust has no alloy.
No storms can move it—sheltered in the Rock—
Not keenest sorrow, nor bewildering joy.

Oh, sorely stricken ones, look up! look up!
Thence only cometh help—there balm is found
His patient love shall sooth your sharpest pang;
His tender touch shall heal your every wound.

Glorious News

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give her no help; but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved —that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidney and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up strength. Only 50c. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist. Guaranteed.

Stole the Whole Outfit.

Garrett had a little excitement Friday morning. It appears that a man came there the night before, and took lodgings at a hotel. He went to bed but before he got up the next morning an officer from Bryan, Ohio, came to look for him, found him in bed and arrested him. It appears that he had stolen a team and wagon and load of wheat of a farmer near Bryan and got away with it, all right, and had sold the whole outfit. He was taken back to Bryan for trial.

Angola Letter.

ANGOLA, Oct. 3, 1899.

Mrs. W. D. French died Saturday and was buried Monday. She came to Angola in 1842, and was 77 years old at her death,

The annual sale of tickets for the Peoples' Lecture Course, took place here yesterday morning, beginning at 5:45, with sixty-three purchasers in line, most of whom bought six tickets each—the limit each was entitled to, and by 8:50 604 tickets were sold. Men began to fall in line as early as five o'clock Sunday evening and some thirty or more were up all night and at 4:00 a. m. Monday morning there were about fifty in line. The boys built fires on the public square, had chairs to sit in, couches and bed springs to lie on and plenty to eat and drink during the vigils of the night. Every seat was sold by noon.

New Burial Law.

People will save trouble and vexations delays, by observing a few simple rules in carrying out the new burial law. First, it must be understood that an undertaker has no right to bury a corpse until he has a permit from a health officer. The health officer will not issue a permit till he has a certificate from the attending physician. So in brief, when a death occurs, the friends should have the attending doctor make out and give to them the regular certificate, of which each doctor has blanks. Then this certificate should be brought along when the friend comes for the coffin. Take the doctor's certificate to the health officer of the town where the undertaker lives, or to the county health officer. He will look over the doctor's certificate, and then issue a burial permit. Now take the burial permit to the undertaker, and you are all right. It is very easy to do if attended to, but if you come to town without the doctor's certificate you will have to go back and get it. The undertaker and all, must observe the law. In each incorporated town is a health officer. In Auburn there are two, Dr. Sebring the county health officer and Dr. Fitch the city health officer.

"A Bunch of Keys."

Chas. H. Hoyt, the celebrated playwright, has probably done more through his writings to make the American people laugh than any other man in the country. One of his earliest and best plays was "A Bunch of Keys," and that it has lost none of its popularity was shown by the large and well pleased audience at the opera house last night when this farce comedy furnishing a whirlwind of laughter, was presented by Gus Bothner's excellent company of comedians, singers and dancers. Manager Bothner has no apologies to make—the people who paid their money to see the show were well repaid for their investment and if anyone in the audience was afflicted with the blues before the show opened we are willing to bet they were cured.

NO USE TRYING

I can't take plain cod-liver oil. Doctor says, try it. He might as well tell me to melt lard or butter and try to take them. It is too rich and will upset the stomach. But you can take milk or cream, so you can take

Scott's Emulsion

It is like cream; but will feed and nourish when cream will not. Babies and children will thrive and grow fat on it when their ordinary food does not nourish them.

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day when taking an ounce of Scott's Emulsion. It gets the digestive machinery in working order so that the ordinary food is properly digested and assimilated.

"It's a Wonder We ain't All Dead."

We eat too much, we eat too fast. we eat too often, and we take too little care of how our meals are prepared, and we would have been dead long ago but for the medical skill of Dr. Caldwell, who formulated Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Since its introduction, we find a great deal less complaint about constipation, indigestion, sick headache, sour stomach, short breath, and all the ills that come from a disordered digestive apparatus, such as some people have, but all may get rid of, by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. OBITUARY.

Wallace J. Shutt, son of of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Shutt, was born in Allen county, Ind., Oct. 30, 1871, died suddenly Sept. 26 1899, age twenty-seven years. ten month and twenty-six days.

He was united in marriage to Miss Belle McKinley, May 11, 1895. To them was born one son. He had been a member of the Spencerville Lutheran church, which he joined in 1892 He leaves a wife, one child, father mother, four brothers and three sisters and a host of friends and neighbors to mourn hissad and early death. He was a kind, loving husband and father. His death was a sad one; for by his kind friendly ways, had won for himself, many warm friends who will greatly miss him. Their first home was at Woodburn, Ind From there he went to Auburn, Ind., in 1897, where he lived till his sudden death. After being prepared for burial, he was taken to the home of his father in Jackson township. The funeral service was held in the Lutheran church at Spencerville, conducted by Rev. E. W. Erick; interment at that place.

When a weeping mutitude were for the last time permitted to look upon him, whom in life they had known only to respect and love. The Lord has given, and the Lord has taken away, and blessed be his holy name.

We miss thee from our home dear brother,
We miss thee from our place;
A shadow o'er our life is cast,
We miss the sunshine of thy face.

We miss thy kind and willing hand,
Thy fond and earnest care;
Our home is dark without thee,
We miss thee everywhere.

One more spirit has flown away,
One more heart is resting today:
It is sad and lonely since he was called away;
Oh what a vacant place in our home today.

The friends here wish to express their heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends for their kind and self-sacrificing efforts to give comfort during their time of sorrow and bereavement. Also they return their heartfelt thanks to his fellow laborers who came and acted as pallbearers.

Is the general impression among people who do not read. Fortunately there are very few people who have eyes and do not read. The more one reads, the more one knows, and the more one learns. Now, if we failed to put this advertisement where you may read it, we would be doing you an injustice, for likely as not, you are this moment suffering, and you don't know what is the matter with you. The great ocean steamer, Scotsman, was wrecked about ten days ago, on a rocky island in the Straits of Belle Isle on her way from England to Canada. Eleven lives were lost, and the survivors suffered great hardships, being exposed to cold rains for nearly a week. And to make matters worse, some of the sailors robbed the ship and passengers. They were sailors picked up to make out a crew, as there was a big strike at the time she started. They have been arrested.

CASTORIA.
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. The Kind You Have Always Bought

THE demonstration accorded Admiral George Dewey in New York was one of the grandest, most gorgeous and spontaneously enthusiastic in the whole history of human pageantry. It was an outpouring of the popular heart and affection for the nation's hero and the world's greatest naval captain, and throughout the broad domain of the United States, from his own native rock-ribbed New England to the sands of the Golden Gate, from semi-tropical Gulf to almost arctic snows, the people of every creed and color joined in the spirit of New York's reception to the victor of Manila bay.

Admiral George Dewey is worthy of that reception. He proved himself a fighter when fighting was to be done and carved his name by the side of Farragut, Barry and Jones in fame's eternal temple. He proved himself a statesman, discreet, diplomatic, dignified, during the crucial days following the battle of Cavite, when indiscretion might jeopardize what had been won and lead to unknown dangers. And at all times and under all circumstances he has proved himself an American gentleman.

DEWEY IN FULL DRESS.

From that May day, in 1898, when the news of his superb victory over the Spanish fleet in Manila harbor electrified the nation, causing many people at first to question its accuracy so astonishingly complete was it, Dewey's name has been oftenest on American lips and his fame has been enshrined in the national heart. He became the hero, the idol of more than 70,000,000 people, and from that moment to the present he has not omitted or committed one act, the omission or commission of which dimmed one ray of his glory. He has maintained his modest composure even while the world united to swell his praises. The greetings tendered him at the various visiting ports on his return voyage wrought no change in the fine fabric of the man and he came back to an almost worshipful people the same in gentlemanly character as he sailed away, free from the inflation of pomp and pride.

It is no wonder that the American people should take and carefully note in memory whatever is illustrative of his character. And thus the writer turns from the pomp of the great reception in New York to the antecedents of Dewey, to trace along the lines of his development the influences and the characteristics that combined to make the victor of Manila and the idol of America.

COMES OF FIGHTING BLOOD.

Early Career and Characteristics of America's Popular Idol.

Admiral George Dewey comes from a fighting stock. There have been Dewey fighters in every American war since Thomas Dewey, the founder of the family in this country, built his cottage in Dorcester, Mass., in 1633. This pioneer Dewey of the New World was born in Sandwich, England. In the revolutionary war we read of a Dewey parson in southern Vermont who adjourned church service to fight with the gallant Stark against the Hessians at the battle of Bennington, and who then returned and completed his sermon. There was a Corporal Dewey who took part in the first skirmish at Lexington. All told, the Deweys furnished twenty-four soldiers in the revolutionary war. In the war of 1812 there were thirteen Deweys who aided in defense of the flag.

By the time the civil war broke out the Dewey name was widely extended. Two dozen Deweys fought among the boys in blue from old Vermont. One Massachusetts regiment contained six Deweys and was commanded by a relative of Admiral Dewey's mother. Admiral Dewey himself won high honors under Farragut and his brother Edward entered the war a private and came out a captain. In Illinois seventy men bearing the Dewey name entered the Union ranks. On the maternal side Admiral Dewey is related to the Porter family, which gave two naval captains to the nation.

OLD DEWEY HOUSE AT BERLIN, VT.
Where Dewey's grandfather lived and where his father was born.

In the war with Spain one of the admiral's brothers sent his two sons to the front and the son of the other volunteered, but got no opportunity to serve, as Vermont's quota was already filled. And the Vermont regiment, by the way, was commanded by a cousin of the family.

Dewey's Father.

Admiral Dewey is in the ninth generation from that Thomas Dewey who carried his household goods to Dorchester in 1633. The admiral grandfaother, Simeon Dewey, was born in Hanover, N. H., considerably over a century ago and bought a farm near Berlin, four miles from Hanover. Here, in 1801, the admiral's father, Dr. Julius Yemans Dewey, was born. In 1822 Dr. Dewey settled in Montpelier, marrying, in 1825, Miss Mary Perrin. Four children were the result of this union, Charles, Edward, George and Mary, all of whom are living.

Dr. Dewey, father of the admiral, was a deeply religious man. He was a man of culture and of force of character, yet he had a heart that was full of the milk of human kindness. He was a poor lad when he struck out into the world for himself. By teaching school in Montpelier he earned enough money to enable him to study medicine and take out his degree. In Montpelier and the surrounding region Dr. Dewey was greatly beloved. He was a pioneer in life insurance and founded a company of which his son, Charles, is president, and another son, Edward, director. He founded Christ Episcopal Church, Montpelier, and here it was that the future admiral was baptized, attended the Sunday school and was confirmed. Here, too, when the future admiral was 5 years old took place the first funeral from the church, that of his mother, Mary Perrin. Many years afterward Dr. Dewey was carried from the same church to Green Mount Cemetery, where he now rests near the scene of his life's labors.

An Early Anecdote.

There are many anecdotes told of George Dewey in those far-off days in Vermont, long ere the future admiral dreamed of the stern realities of life. He had a temper that had a habit of asserting itself and that caused good Dr. Dewey considerable worry. He was a leader among his companions in all kinds of childish pranks and was a fighter. In fact his combativeness was always pronounced.

Once in his father's buggy he set out with a companion to bring home the cows. They found the ford over the Dog river, which enters the Winooski near Montpelier, impassable. Against the advice of his companion, George drove into the rushing stream. The top of the buggy was carried away and the lads only saved themselves by getting on the horse's back. When George returned home his father was away and the youngster's innate sense of tactics prompted him to go to bed. The father soon afterward made his appearance in George's chamber and began chiding him for his rashness. From the depths of the bedclothes came this childish appeal: "You ought to be thankful that my life was spared." The good doctor turned away without another word.

His Schoolboy Days.

George Dewey was sent first, when a little chap, to the Washington County grammar school in Montpelier. The scholars there did not have the reputation of being amenable to discipline, and it is to be feared that George was no exception to the rule. To this school in due time came Z. K. Pangborn, now Maj. Z. K. Pangborn of the Jersey City Journal. The boys, quite exhilarated by the success they had had with former masters, made a bold stand, with young George Dewey to the front and center. George was at once called upon for examination, but the spirit of mutiny being rife within him, he declined to go. The teacher thereupon seized the collar of young Dewey with one hand and his whip with the other; no quarter being cried, none was given, and the lad got a whipping the like of which had never been served out in that district. He was then told to go home, and Mr. Pangborn went along, the rest of the school trooping at his heels.

MRS. SUSIE GOODWIN DEWEY.
Wife of the admiral, whose death in 1872 is the great sorrow of his life.

Dr. Dewey stood at his door, and sizing up the situation dismissed the boys and took George and the schoolmaster to his study.

"What is it, my son?" he asked.

In answer, George stripped off his coat and shirt and showed a back covered with red stripes. The father perceiving that George was still rebellious, asserted that he would add to the punishment if Mr. Pangborn had not given enough. The hint was sufficient and George became dutiful.

George came to be an admirer of Mr. Pangborn, and when afterward the latter established a private academy at Johnson, Vt., George followed him thither by his own request.

At 15 young Dewey went to the Norwich Military Academy, and it was while there he conceived a taste for military life and expressed a desire to go to Annapolis. At the age of 17 he entered that institution in the class of '54.

At that time Dewey was a strong, active boy of medium height, with flashing black eyes and shoulders beginning to broaden. He could swim as one born to the water and excelled in all outdoor exercises. At Annapolis he found the line sharply drawn between the Northern and Southern boys and he proceeded promptly to get into trouble. He had a spirit that would bear no insult and he was singled out by the leader of the Southern lads as the most promising of the Northern faction for a little excitement. The Southerner was not disappointed. George was far from resenting the term "Yankee"; he thought that of "doughface" more opprobrious, and as the quarrel grew his enemy did not stop there. So one day coming out of the mess hall George waited for him and calmly knocked him down, getting the better of the mix-up that followed. Some time afterward he had an inkstand hurled at his head in the reading room, which resulted in another personal encounter, with Dewey again victorious. But the matter did not end even here, for the Southerner wrote a challenge to mortal combat with pistols at close range. The offer was accepted with alacrity, the seconds chosen and even the ground paced off, when the classmates, seriously alarmed, informed some of the officers stationed at Annapolis. The duel was not fought.

DR. JULIUS Y. DEWEY,
Father of the Admiral.

It is pleasant to narrate that the breach was eventually healed and that George Dewey grew to be one of the most popular members of the class.

Young Dewey was graduated in 1858. As a midshipman he was sent to the European station, cruising for two years in the Mediterranean on the Wabash, with Captain Barron of Virginia, who afterward joined the Confederate navy. In 1860 he returned to Annapolis to be examined for his commission, and showed his ability by leading his fellows.

IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Dewey's Brilliant Service Under the Great Farragut.

Dewey was at home in Montpelier when Sumter was fired upon. One week afterward he secured his commission as a lieutenant and was ordered to the steam sloop Mississippi of the West Gulf squadron. It will be remembered that Farragut raised his flag over this fleet in February, 1862. The Mississippi was the only side-wheeler of the lot. Commander Melancthon Smith was her captain and Dewey was her first lieutenant. Early in April the larger ships, the Mississippi among them, were unloaded and hauled over the bar, and by the night of the 23d the squadron was ready for the business of running past the formidable batteries of St. Philip and Jackson, ready to conquer the Confederate fleet beyond and to press on to New Orleans.

Amid Smoke and Flame.

Farragut divided his ships into two divisions. Captain Theodorus Bailey had command of that going first, and the Mississippi was the third in his line. Decks were whitewashed, no lights were showing, and the night was inky black save for the lurid red of an occasional Confederate fire. The big ship, having a speed of only eight knots, hugged the shore to avoid the swift current. On, on they steamed, a slow, stately procession that knew no check, until the flames of the broadside guns leaped into the very ports of the batteries and the shot struck in midair. So close were they that the gunners hurled curses at each other across the narrow space of black water. On the high bridge of the side-wheeler, in the midst of belching smoke and flame, stood Dewey, guiding the Mississippi as calmly as though he were going up New York bay on a still afternoon in Indian summer. He was a perfect master of himself.

"Do you know the channel, Dewey?" Captain Smith asked anxiously and more than once as he paced from port to starboard. The lieutenant was very young, only 24, and the situation would have tried a veteran.

"Yes, sir," replied Dewey with confidence each time. But he admitted afterward that he expected to ground every moment.

Dewey's Heroic Work.

This is how Chief Engineer Baird, U. S. N., who was there, remembers him: "I can see him now in the red and yellow glare flung from the cannon-mouths. It was like some terrible thunder storm with almost incessant lightning. For an instant all would be dark and Dewey unseen. Then the forts would belch forth, and there he was away up in the midst of it, the flames from the guns almost touching him and the big shot and shell passing near enough to him to blow him over with their breath, while he held firmly to the bridge rail. Every time the dark came back I felt sure that we would never see Dewey again. But at the next flash there he stood. His hat was blown off and his eyes were aflame. But he gave his orders with the air of a man in thorough command of himself. He took in everything. He saw a point of advantage and seized it at once. And when from around the hull of the Pensacola the ram darted, Dewey like a flash saw what was best to be done, and as the ram came up alongside the entire starboard broadside plunged a mass of iron shot and shell through her armor and she began to sink. Her crew ran her ashore and escaped. A boat's crew from our ship went on board, thinking to extinguish the flames which our broadside had started and capture her. But she was too far gone. Dewey took us all through the fight, and in a manner which won the warmest praise, not only of all on board, but of Farragut himself. He was cool from first to last, and after we had passed the fort and reached safety and he came down from the bridge his face was black with smoke, but there wasn't a drop of perspiration on his brow."

THE DEWEY LOVING CUP.

Had His Coat Tail Shot Away.

Things began to go wrong on the river a year later and Faragut once more ran up from the gulf to adjust them. Port Hudson shoals and currents are among the most dangerous in the stream, and it was while running the forts here that the Mississippi was lost. The Hartford and Alabama led, then came the Monongahela and Kineo, the Richmond, and Genesee, followed by the Mississippi alone. The Monongahela and her consort both grounded, though they both managed to get off. But directly opposite the center of Port Hudson battery the Mississippi stuck hard and fast. Shot after shot was poured into her until her hull was riddled and she had to be abandoned. She was hit 250 times in half an hour. The officers who took the first boats never returned, and so the task of getting the men to safety devolved upon Lieut. Dewey. Twice he went to the Richmond and twice came back until he and Captain Smith stood alone on the deck. The ship was afire in five places. Together the two left the ship amid splashing shot, Dewey without his coat tails, which had been shot away.

Lieut. Dewey that same year was at Donaldsonville and afterward succeeded to the temporary command of the Monongahela when her captain, Abner Read, was killed.

At Fort Fisher.

If getting into the thick of the fight be deemed good fortune Dewey was one of the luckiest officers of the war. He was Commodore Thatcher's first lieutenant on the Colorado at Fort Fisher in December and January, 1864-'65. Toward the end of the second engagement at that place Admiral Porter signaled Thatcher to close in and silence a certain part of the works. As the ship had already received no inconsiderable damage her officers remonstrated. But Dewey, who, in addition to dash and bravery, had now acquired marked tactical ability, was quick to see the advantage to be gained by the move. "We shall be safer there," he said, quietly, "and the works can be taken in fifteen minutes." He had his way and won.

The work of Dewey gained for Thatcher the nomination of acting rear admiral and later Dewey was rewarded by a commission as lieutenant commander.

After the War.

After the war Dewey served for two years on the European squadron. In 1867, while on duty at Portsmouth, he became engaged to Miss Susie Goodwin, daughter of Ichabod Goodwin, known as the "fighting Governor" of New Hampshire. In 1870 he received his first command, that of the Narragansett. Two years later came the great sorrow of his life, the death of his beloved wife. He was left with one son, George Goodwin Dewey, who is engaged in business in New York.

In 1875 Dewey was advanced to be commander and was assigned to the lighthouse board. Next he was commander of the Juniata in Arctic waters, and in 1884 was made captain of the Dolphin.

His next promotion was to be commodore and in this capacity he went to the Asiatic station in the fall of 1897, to win his way to undying fame by the victory at Manila.

DEWEY AT MANILA.

Marvelous Victory Which Made Him the Idol of His Country.

When war broke out between this country and Spain Dewey, then at Hong Kong, found himself in a trying position. He was forced to leave British waters, and with no coaling station nearer than Honolulu there was but one thing to do—take Manila. But the taking of the capital of the Philippine Islands involved the defeat of the Spanish fleet. The location of that fleet was unknown, and with thousands of islands to hide among it could not be considered an easy task to corner it.

It is familiar history how Dewey with his squadron arrived on Saturday evening, April 30, at Corregidor Island, which guards the entrance to the harbor. The moon was up, but no lights showed from the vessels until a spark from the funnel of the dispatch boat McCullough attracted the attention of the forts and drew their fire. The fire was returned and the squadron passed on, while a few torpedoes harmlessly exploded in front of the flagship. Steaming at slow speed all night, with the men at full length beside their guns, the squadron saw as gray dawn broke the sleeping city of Manila and Cavite, with its white houses and battlements and its great arsenal, close at hand. But a gladder sight to Dewey's eyes was the Spanish fleet, its officers and men dreaming the national dream of "manana"—to-morrow.

How Dewey, leading the line in the flagship Olympia, steamed past the Spanish vessels five times with a gradually decreasing range; how he issued the order to fire, "You may fire when you're ready, Gridley;" how he smashed the Spanish vessels and forts with a ceaseless rain of shot and shell; how he retired to rest his men and give them time for breakfast, and how he returned to complete the work of destruction and did complete it, sinking eleven Spanish ships, without losing a ship himself or a man—all this is familiar to every American. And then his modest account of the battle, and the giving the credit of the achievement to his officers, caps the climax of one of the most brilliant and complete naval battles in the history of the world.

Victory Brings New Labors.

But with the sinking of the Spanish fleet Dewey's work was not done. His victory had opened up new fields for his energy. He had to deal with natives, Spaniards and other foreigners. Under the jealous eyes of foreign men-of-war he had to keep watch and ward over the new acquisition and solve the confusing problems that arose daily. An indiscreet act might embroil the country with other nations, and too much leniency would be considered as temerity. But to every difficulty that arose he was equal. He was warrior, diplomat, interpreter of international law all in one. And for thirteen months he kept his vigil in Manila harbor, ready for any emergency that might come.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH, MONTPELIER.
It was founded by Admiral Dewey's father and in it the admiral was baptized and confirmed.

Once, after the battle of Manila, when Spain was about dispatching a squadron under Camara to the Philippines, Dewey sent a cablegram to the naval department suggesting that Camara would turn back if the United States were to make a demonstration on the coast of Spain. Thereupon it was announced that Commodore Watson would be sent across the Atlantic. The hint was sufficient and Camara turned back to Spain from the Suez canal.

The strain of these eventful months in the tropics bore heavily on the admiral, and when he set out on his triumphal voyage home he was a sick man. Fortunately his health is restored and he is able to enjoy the demonstrations that everywhere await him in the land that he has so signally served.

Chinese Care Little for Pain.

"A very curious thing about the Chinese is their indifference to pain," said Dr. E. Z. Simmons, the veteran missionary of Canton, who was in the city a few days ago. "We do a great deal of surgical work in the great city hospital conducted by the united missions at Canton, and it was at first supposed that there would be endless trouble in persuading the natives to take anesthetics, but the doctors found, to their surprise, that anesthetics were rarely needed, and that their patients endured the most serious operations without flinching the fraction of an inch. The average Chinaman will assume the required position and hold it like a statue. When the knife touches his flesh he begins a slight, monotonous moan and keeps it up until the ordeal is over, but he gives no other indication of pain. Whether this is due to nerve-bluntness or stoicism, or a combination of both, I have never been able to determine, but the fact remains that the Canton hospital uses less chloroform or ether than any other large institution of the kind on earth."—New Orleans Times Democrat.

DEWEY'S CHARACTER MIRRORED BY WORDS.

Characteristic utterances from the lips of Admiral Dewey give accurate glimpses of the character of the man. Some of his most notable sayings are these:

"You may fire when you are ready, Gridley."

This sentence opened the battle of Manila Bay.

"Open with all guns."

This command was given in the height of the Manila battle.

"You must keep or wholly give up the Philippine Islands."

This was his message to the peace commission at Paris.

"The deck of my vessel is United States territory, and I'll parade my men for no foreigner that ever drew breath."

This he said to the complaining captain of the port of Malta.

"My coat tail has been removed by an act of Providence."

This was said after a shark had bitten off the appendages.

"American sailors, like the American people, have confidence in themselves."

This was said after the battle of Manila.

"Too much confidence in naval warfare is sometimes bad for yourself."

This declaration was made to Capt. Chichester of the English navy at Manila.

DINNER GIVEN ADMIRAL DEWEY AT NAPLES.

REMARKABLE MODESTY IN DEWEY'S REPORTS.

Admiral Dewey's modesty of nature was never better illustrated than in his two official dispatches to Washington announcing his great victory. On May 1 he cabled:

"The squadron arrived at daybreak this morning. Immediately engaged the enemy and destroyed the following Spanish war vessels: Reina Cristina, Castilla, Ulloa, Isla de Cuba, General Lezo, Isla de Luzon, Duero, Correo, Velasco, Mindanao, one transport and the water battery at Cavite. The squadron is uninjured and only a few men were slightly wounded. The only means of telegraphing is to the American consul at Hongkong. I shall communicate with him."

His second dispatch was on May 4, and reads:

"I have taken possession of naval station at Cavite, on Philippine Islands. Have destroyed the fortifications at bay entrance, paroling garrison. I control bay completely and can take city at any time. The squadron is in excellent health and spirits. Spanish loss not fully known, but very heavy; 150 killed, including captain of Reina Cristina. I am assisting in protecting Spanish sick and wounded. Two hundred and fifty sick and wounded in hospital within our lines. Much excitement at Manila. Will protect foreign residents."

COCKRAN'S GREATEST SPEECH.

It Was Made at the National Democratic Convention in 1892.

Those who heard Bourke Cockran's speech at the trust conference in Chicago were reminded of his appearance at the Democratic convention in 1892. Perhaps no orator ever made a greater personal triumph under adverse circumstances and at the same time accomplished so little for his cause. The Democratic convention met in the temporary wigwam on the lake front. The professional politicians and the party leaders were, as a rule, for anybody to beat Cleveland. The Tammany delegation from Cleveland's own State were fighting him bitterly. The delegates as a body were strong in favor of Cleveland's renomination. On the morning of Wednesday, June 22, the convention held a short session, nothing of importance being accomplished. When it met again in the afternoon the issues were squarely joined and the delegates setled down to a fight to a finish, though the main issue was never seriously in doubt. The roll of the States was called, and one after the other nominated its favorite son. There was much oratory and the time for dinner was passed without adjournment. The evening wore on and orators were still orating. The convention grew tired, hungry and impatient. At midnight a heavy thunderstorm broke out. The noise drowned the voice of the speakers, while the rain ran in streams through the leaky roof. All over the house umbrellas were raised, while the lightning, which seemed to flash down into the center of the ampitheater, threw a lurid light over the scene. Still orators were trying to make themselves heard. Many of them were almost hissed from the stage. Men like Watterson, "Pat" Collins of Boston, and Senator Daniel of Virginia had difficulty in getting a respectful hearing. At 2 o'clock in the morning Cockran arose to speak on behalf of Tammany. He was voicing a hopeless cause, and he knew it. He had the competition of a thunderstorm to meet. His audience had been in session for eleven consecutive hours. They were half-starved and almost overcome by sleep. Cockran, however, held them spellbound and breathless for nearly an hour. He woke up the sleepers and made the hungry forget that they had not eaten. His speech was a bitter attack on Cleveland. When he had finished there was a wild burst of cheers, after which the convention immediately proceeded to nominate Cleveland for President.

WOMAN RIDES 700 MILES.

Miss Yatman Goes Distance Awheel in Eighty-one Hours.

Miss Jane Yatman, of New York, rode seven centuries, breaking all records of women for distance on the road. Although showing signs of the heavy strain of the long ride, and being weak from fatigue, Miss Yatman was in remarkably good condition for a woman who had ridden 700 miles with only two hours' sleep in record-breaking time. The rider covered the distance in eighty-one hours and five minutes, which was nearly three hours better than she had expected to. When she started her ambition was to go the seven centuries in eighty-four hours, which would have been better than any woman's record for the distance. Miss Yatman lives with her mother at 215 East One Hundred and Fifteenth street. She undertook her record-breaking bicycle rides simply for the love of it. She made a new record for 500 miles last July, which was eclipsed a few days ago by Mrs. Jane Lindsay, of Brooklyn, who made a new 600-mile record. Miss Yatman could not bear the thought of losing the distinction she had gained, so she immediately began making preparations to go 700 miles for a new record. Miss Yatman's ride was over a triangular course on the Long Island road.

MISS JANE YATMAN.

Remembered Him.

The lie which a man utters often sticks to him through life. It is a terrible but a just retribution. The son of Vice President Hannibal Hamlin tells of a man who had been chosen to the Maine Legislature to vote for Mr. Hamlin in one of his anti-slavery battles for the Senate; but he broke his word, and like many men of the kind, lied about Mr. Hamlin.

Many years after Mr. Hamlin happened to be in Massachusetts at a reunion of old soldiers, and who should turn up but B. He hailed the Senator in an effusive manner, and with an oily smile spoke of their former acquaintance. Mr. Hamlin did not seem to recognize him until the man exclaimed:

"Why, have you forgotten John B.?"

"I have not forgotten that B.," replied Mr. Hamlin, somewhat grimly, "because he was an awful liar."

A Peculiar House.

The most peculiar house in the United Kingdom is probably the triangular one at Rushton, in Northamptonshire. Its design is supposed to typify the Trinity. It has three stories, and each story has three windows on each of the three sides, while each of the windows in two of the three stories is in the shape of a trefoil—the three-leaved shamrock. In each of the other windows there are twelve panes, arranged in three fours, and the panes throughout are triangular.

Three gables rise on each side, and from the center, where their roofs meet, a three-sided chimney, surmounted by a triangular pyramid, terminates in a large trefoil. The smoke issues from three round holes on each of the three sides of the chimney. Three Latin inscriptions, one on each side of the house, have each thirty letters, while over the door there is another Latin inscription of three words, the English of which is, "There are three that bear record," and on each side are the carved figures of three angels bearing shields. Inside the house each floor contains three three-sided apartments; the length of each of the walls, by outside measurement, is thirty-three feet, four inches, that is, exactly thirty-three and one-third feet.

Dewey Celebration.

Americans are quick to appreciate merit. The Dewey celebrations prove that, and it is again forcibly demonstrated in the praise and confidence which is accorded Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, one of the most meritorious remedies ever compounded for indigestion, constipation, dyspepsia, biliousness, liver or kidney disease or any trouble arising from a weak stomach.

Have a Piece of Devonshire.

It was at an open-air meeting in a village near Exeter that a well-known speaker was holding forth.

"Men," he shouted, "what we want and what we are going to get is free land. We want the land for the people. Free land, men, we want, and we are going to have free land."

Just then a large piece of earth landed on the speaker's eye, and while he was removing the clod a voice yelled out:

"There's a piece of Devonshire to begin with!"—Tit-Bits.

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED.

A Young Hero Whose Heroism Did Not Last Long.

Every one has seen the big, dark, beetle-browed man who gets into the elevator first, stands in the door and makes people squeeze past him, rides to the top floor and gets out. Well, he got in the way of a slender, pale-looking but erect young fellow the other day—a young man who had some indications of having suffered from consumption. The young man was nearest the elevator as the door opened, and started to step in; but no—the beetle-browed man was there, and he jammed ahead and got in first. Then he turned around and filled up three-fourths of the doorway, and looked over the heads of the rest of the people who wanted to go up. The young fellow stepped back, took the measure of the big bully and said:

"Do you think you are the only one who wants to ride in this elevator?"

The big man glared at him sluggishly, but said nothing.

"What you need," resumed the straight, slender, consumptive looking man, "is a good, swift jolt in the jaw. You need it as much as any one I know of—and you are a little past due."

The rest of the people were delighted. They had suffered so often from the boor that they were secretly and silently encouraging the heroic champion. They could see, in fancy, that slender arm with muscles of steel leap from the side, the knuckles as hard as iron, land with a practiced directness on the ugly face of the big man. How noble it would be with the little giant standing triumphant over the prostrate and bleeding body of the bully who had troubled every one! The elevator man started to slam the door. The passengers thrilled, for the crucial moment had come. There was a movement on the part of the big man. His challenger started quickly, nervously, as if picking out the place where he would land his avenging blow.

And then the big man reached out, caught the slender fellow by the shoulder, brought him into the car and hung him up by the belt on a tuliplike projection in the iron grillwork on the cage. But he did not say a word.—Chicago Post.

A BRONZE BADGER.

Emblem with Which New Battleship Wisconsin Will Be Adorned.

The badger being the emblem of the State of Wisconsin, the people of the commonwealth, or a certain number of them, have decided that it will be proper to adorn the new battleship Wisconsin, now in the course of construction, with a bronze figure of the little animal. With this object in view the Wisconsin battleship committee employed Paul Kupper, a German artist of Milwaukee, to make an image, and the work has been completed at Chicago, where the model was cast in bronze. The figure, which is four feet long, rests on a shield, which is a copy of the escutcheon of the State of Wisconsin. The metal used in casting the figure was obtained from Sapnish guns captured at Santiago.

Mistaken Sound.

Mme. de Navarro has recorded in "A Few Memories" the greatest lesson she ever received against too much realism. In a certain drama, the heroine, under great excitement, suddenly stops to gain composure, as she hears the approaching carriages of the guests.

"Hark!" she says, "I hear the wheels of their carriages."

We obtained the effects of approaching wheels, but, try as we would, the stamping of the horses' feet upon the gravel before Clarisse's door we could not manage. At last a brilliant idea struck me, which the stage manager promptly endorsed.

It was that we should have in a donkey from Covent Garden to trot up and down behind the scenes on the gravel especially laid for him. We were decidedly nervous on the first appearance of our four-footed friend, whose role was to counterfeit the high-stepping horses of the brilliant French count.

When his cue was given, there was only an ominous silence, I repeated the word in a louder voice, when such a braying and scuffling were heard as sent the audience into roars of laughter. Although it was one of the most serious situations of the play, I could not help joining in their mirth until the tears rolled down my cheeks.

Extravagant Dress in England.

Members of the nobility in England make a great deal of pocket money by writing for the papers and magazines. One of these writers is Lady Violet Greville, and, according to her, the American women are responsible for the extravagance of English women today. Ten or fifteen years ago, she says, the American women, "fragile, beautiful creatures," appeared in England, wearing Paris gowns and beautifully coiffured, and society succumbed to them. That was the end of dinner dresses that lasted for years and trousseau gowns that were worn for a lifetime. Then was the beginning of frown and discontent, and debt on the part of the Englishman, but the English woman was patriotic—that's the way Lady Violet puts it—and was not to be outdone by the Yankee millionaires, and she took to good gowns.

Consumption of Rubber.

The consumption of rubber in the United States has attained enormous proportions, and is still rapidly increasing. In 1896 we used 34,000,000 pounds, in 1897 over 42,000,000, and in 1898 44,256,026.

"A Gentle Wind of Western Birth"

Tells no sweeter story to humanity than the announcement that the health-giver and health-bringer, Hood's Sarsaparilla, tells of the birth of an era of good health. It is the one reliable specific for the cure of all blood, stomach and liver troubles.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Never Disappoints

Freaks of a New-Yorker.

There resides near Vestal, New York, a family named Glenn, and two brothers and two sisters are now living. Years ago the father bought coats for the boys, but neglected one of the boys, John, Jr., whereupon the boy said he would never wear a coat as long as his father lived. He went up stairs to his room, where he remained until fourteen years after, when the father died.

The house was afterward painted with the most grotesque and curious designs. While John, the peculiar, and a brother were disputing about these designs, the brother said: "John, I wish you would go up stairs and stay there."

John did so, remaining as before for four years, coming down to attend the brother's funeral. John, the recluse, is bleached as white as a woman, because of his long confinement. He is 65 years old. A sister had charge of the finances, but the sisters and brothers live a secluded life, never mingling with the world without.

An Australian Gold Field.

The romance of Australian gold mining is not inaptly illustrated by the history of the Wyalong gold field, in New South Wales. Less than seven years ago it was simply a grazing district, consisting largely of crown lands. At the end of 1894 the settled population in the Wyalong and Barmedman districts was between 4,000 and 5,000, the number of claims worked being about 300. In 1895 the quantity of gold obtained was 25,497 ounces; in 1896 it was 33,195 ounces; and in 1897, 34,370 ounces, being the largest auriferous output of any gold field in the colony, the next richest being Hillgrove, with 31,886 ounces. The total yield from the Wyalong gold field from its discovery at the end of 1893 up to the present has been estimated at 130,000 ounces.

A Letter to Mrs. Pinkham Brought Health to Mrs. Archambo.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 42,395]

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For two years I felt tired and so weak and dizzy that some days I could hardly go around the house. Backache and headache all the time and my food would not digest and had such pains in the womb and troubled with leucorrhœa and kidneys were affected.

"After birth of each child I grew weaker, and hearing so much of the good you had done, I wrote to you and have taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one box of Lozenges, one box of Liver Pills, one package of Sanative Wash, and to-day I am feeling as well as I ever did. When I get up in the morning I feel as fresh as I did when a girl and eat and sleep well and do all of my work. If ever I feel weak again shall know where to get my strength. I know your medicine cured me."—MRS. SALINA ARCHAMBO, CHARLEMONT, MASS.

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled; for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometime past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, treating by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women a year. All women who suffer are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice, which will be promptly given without charge.

STORIES OF MEISSONIER.

Careful Way in Which the Great Painter Did His Work.

The Contemporary Review has some reminiscences of the great French artist Meissonier, given by Verestchagin.

Everybody, says M. Verestchagin, is aware of the conscientious way in which Meissioner executed his work; but few know the labor and expense he bestowed on the preparation for it. I remembered, for instance, his painting a horseman, in a dress of the last century, passing along a deserted road in a strong wind. The cloak was flowing and the head of the rider, with his cap over his ears, was bowing before the storm, which was bringing on heavy clouds and lashing the grass and trees. Both the horse and the rider were first beautifully modeled in wax. The former model had a bridle and saddle elegantly worked out in every detail from the real materials. The rider's cloak, hat and spurred boots were also miniature masterpieces, executed after drawings of the period. In order to get the folds of the twisting cloak it was dipped into thin glue, so that it stiffened in its proper pose. In short, everything was ingeniously fitted up so as to insure the greatest possible perfection of the picture, and showed, at any rate, very uncommon demands upon the artist's skill.

"But how did you paint the snowy road in your picture of 'Napoleon in 1814?'" I asked him. In reply, he picked out from under the table a low platform, about a metre and a half square, and said: "On this I prepared all that was required—snow, mud, and ruts. I kneaded the clay and pushed across it this piece of cannon several times, up and down. With a shod hoof I then pressed the marks of the horses' feet; I strewed flour over it, pushed the cannon across again, and continued to do so until I obtained the semblance of a real road. Then I salted it, and the road was ready." "What did you salt it for?" "To get the brilliancy of the snow. Why do you smile? How else could you do it?" "It was very ingenious," I answered. "Je vous fais mes compliments. But, if I had been you, I should have gone to Russia, where nearly every road is dug up in the way you represented, and should have painted a study from nature." "Yes! But nous autres Parisiens do not move about so easily."

Road Civilities.

The man on the yellow bicycle swerved hurriedly to one side to get out of the way of a buggy and ran into the curbstone, to the serious disfigurement of his front wheel.

"You will pardon me," jeered the man in the buggy, stopping to look at the wreck, "if I call that a mighty poor turn out."—Chicago Tribune.

Important Information for Housekeepers.

For those who are accustomed to sending away from home for their goods it is of the greatest importance to know the character and reliability of the establishments selling goods to families from catalogues. The great emporium of the John M. Smyth Co., located at 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, has been established for a third of a century, and has furnished over half a million homes in Chicago and vicinity alone. This firm enjoys the confidence of the public by its many years of fair dealing. It issues an immense illustrated catalogue that should be in every family, as it describes and gives the price of every article required for household use. A sample of the extraordinary values offered by this firm is shown in the illustration of elegant lace curtains at 98c in another column of this paper. These curtains are indeed wonderful values, and yet they are but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the beautiful catalogue of the John M. Smyth Company.

The Barber Got His Money.

A suspicious-looking individual entered a barber shop in Manchester, and while being shaved casually remarked: "I suppose a good many customers forget to pay?"

"No, sir," the barber replied. "There was a time when I used to give credit, but I never do now. In fact, nobody asks for it any more."

"How's that?"

"Well, you see," said the barber, trying the edge of his razor on his thumbnail, "whenever I shaved a gentleman who asked me to mark it up I put a little nick in his nose with my razor, and kept tally that way. They very soon didn't want to run up bills."

There was a tremor in the customer's voice as he answered, from beneath the lather:

"Do you object to being paid in advance?"—Tid-Bits.

Drying preparations simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants, fumes, smokes and snuffs and use that which cleanses, soothes and heals. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and will cure catarrh or cold in the head easily and pleasantly. A trial size will be mailed for 10 cents. All druggists sell the 50c. size. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N.Y.

The Balm cures without pain, does not irritate or cause sneezing. It spreads itself over an irritated and angry surface, relieving immediately the painful inflammation.

With Ely's Cream Balm you are armed against Nasal Catarrh and Hay Fever.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

If there is one thing on which the housewife prides herself it is that of having her laundering done nicely, so that the wearing apparel may be the admiration of all. The washing is a small matter, any one almost can do that, but to have the linens present that flexible and glossy appearance after being ironed requires a fine quality of starch.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two packages of this new starch—"Red Cross" trade mark brand, also two of the children's Shakspeare pictures painted in twelve beautiful colors as natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free.

—Large acreage of wheat sown in Indiana, but in many parts drouth is reported.

—Trustee Dancer of Jackson township called on business yesterday. He does business too, on business methods.

—Goshen Democrat:—G. W. Farrell and Mrs. Mary Violett went to Auburn to attend the funeral of their cousin, Mrs. Will Rickel.

—For the excursion to Chicago this morning 148 tickets were sold from here. The train was well loaded when it reached the Junction.

—The Fort Wayne News says C. M. Brown of Auburn was there this week, and adds "Mr. Brown is one of Northern Indiana's leading politicians."

—A new railroad company is being organized to run from Fort Wayne direct to Indianapolis. It would be a fine thing for all Northern Indiana.

—October 15, Daniel Mottinger who resides in Franklin township will receive $2,000 on a matured policy in the Union Central Life Insurance Co.

—A patent has been granted to W. H. Keeran of Fort Wayne for a writing surface for black boards or slates. Also one to J. Kroner, Kendallville for a refrigerator pail.

—It was reported here last evening that young Switzer, injured on the Kendallville race track Thursday, was dead. Switzer is able to be out again, though he had a close call.

—P. L. Bishop, at the Wabash elevators, is in the apple business and has already purchased and shipped over 5,000 bushels. Those having apples to sell can find a good market for them in Auburn.

—Waterloo is taking phones liberally on its exchange. The Press says that some nearby farmers are likely to unite and have a phone for neighborhood use; the expense to be paid by all. Good plan.

—Counterfeit silver dollars were plowed up in a large quantity on a La Porte county farm the other day. It is believed a den of counterfeiters was located there years ago. The coins bore date of 1849.

—Mrs. Henry DeLong and her daughter Zoe, of Sedan were callers at our office yesterday. They report the daughter of Marion DeLong as still very sick, and her sister is also down with the same complaint.

—An enterprising Philadelphia firm has bought up all the available steel that has been recovered from the sunken warship Maine and is working it up into watch cases. Properly "blued" it is said to be a pretty case.

—The Indiana state Baptist convention will holds its annual meeting Oct. 10-15 at the first Baptist church, Indianapolis. It is expected that 600 delegates from the different churches of state will attend the meeting.

—David McCrory, father of W. H. McCrory, engineer at the light plant, died at his home near Leo, Thursday morning, aged seventy-three years. He was a pioneer resident of Allen county, having lived there nearly sixty years.

Two "smart Alecs," at Crawfordsville refused to aid a constable in making an arrest when called upon, and were heavily fined. The law is as old as the hills, but is a good one. Officers have a perfect right to call for help and must be obeyed.

—The race between the four Garrett horses at the Kendallville fair yesterday was won by Fritzy Fike's bay mare, "Mollie Monroe," in three straight half-mile heats; best time 1:15. The second, third and fourth places were taken by Dr Halter, "Jack" Philbrick and Dr. Clevenger, respectively.

—Wireless telegraphy is to be used in surveying and locating the Aleutian Islands and other Alaskan points. It is now known that these islands do not lie where they are shown on maps, and they are a great trouble to sailors. It is the governments purpose now, to so locate them so ships may know where they really are.

—Mr. Jones, state superintendent of public instruction, says a number of township trustees have resigned in various parts of the state, the reasons given being that their township advisory boards had reduced the salary of teachers. In DeKalb county, there is no such clash. All our people know that teachers are not paid too much. And we all know that after a trustee has entered into a written contract with a teacher, that ends it, unless fraud or some such thing can be shown.

From New Mexico.

SPRINGER, N. M. Oct. 1, 1899.

EDITOR COURIER:—I will drop you a line. My wife and I are in perfect health and we are having beautiful weather. I can stand in my door and gaze upon the lovely mountains 90 to 125 miles away. We can see a snowy range in Colorado that is topped with snow the year round. There are rich mines of gold, silver, copper and other minerals here, and ranges covered with cattle and sheep almost by the million. Stock raising is the chief business here. I enjoy the hunting here. There are plenty of ducks and rabbits, and I have killed a number of the former this fall.

Several months ago I organized a band here, all new beginners with myself as leader, and I can say I am proud of the progress made by the boys. The band has seventeen members, with all instruments and nice uniforms paid for and a neat little sum in the treasury. We gave a concert on the Fourth of July and one last week amounting to $205. My friends at home will see that my health is much improved when I can play a cornet and keep up the lead for seventeen men.

In speaking of our band the Springer Stockman says:

The Springer band is an institution we are to be proud of, and the two entertainments they gave, July 4 and Sept. 27, were crowned with great success, and the last one has made our people prouder of the band than ever. The band has been successful in retaining the services of their excellent leader Prof Frank S. Campbell, and through instructions it will be one of the finest bands in the territory. The musical given by the band was a great scucess. The male quartet sang four interesting selections. Prof. Smith, one of the greatest cornetists in the west, played four solos and was warmly encored. The boys delighted the large audience with their fine music, and the ladies of Springer presented them with a lovely banner.

Mrs. Campbell is giving nine lessons each week on piano and organ and is getting new pupils all the while. In closing with best wishes to our old friends at home, including the boys of the Auburn band, I am

Yours very truly,
FRANK S. CAMPBELL.

Burglars at Work.

For the first time in a good while burglars plied their trade in Auburn last night The scene of operations was confined to the south end of town and loss was merely nominal.

At McNabb's meat market entrance was gained by prying open a window. The front of the cash register was badly wrecked and the safe opened, but the money had previously been removed and the robbers got nothing for their pains. Proctor's barber shop was entered, but nothing of much value was taken, and they then turned their attention to Potter's grocery. At this place a window was partly pried open, but for some reason the job was abandoned before entrance was effected. So far there is no clue.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters;' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50cts., guaranteed, at H. B. McCord's Drugstore.

The Island of Rum Is Private Property.

The island of Rum, says London Truth in a recent issue, is private property, and the owner declines to allow any uitlander to set a foot on it. This unpleasant discovery was made the other day by an artist who thought of going there to sketch. There is a line of steamers running regularly to the island, but the firm which owns them omitted to mention, when the artist took his ticket, that no passengers are allowed to land. So, having gone to Rum, and viewed the island from the deck of the steamer, the artist had to go back again. He was subsequently told that if he wished to land he must obtain permission of "the laird," who is an Englishman.

A Mystery Cleared Up.

Thursday evening a car was cut off at the Wabash yards in which was a nice-looking horse. Agent Zent had not bought any horses, and was at a loss to know what to do with the animal, which was evidently very hungry and thirsty. The consignee failing to show up, the horse was taken to Trout's livery barn where it was given proper attention, and speculation as to its ownership was rife all day yesterday. The mystery was cleared up this morning when P. D. West appeared at the Wabash station with a bill of lading for a horse he had purchased during his recent trip to Missouri and which had been shipped from St. Louis. Instead of shipping the horse to Mr. West the consignor sent it in his own name, hence the delay in delivery. Mr. West now has the horse, which is a fine roadster and well bred, and everybody interested seems to be satisfied.

Frank Rempis.

This difficult operation was performed yesterday by Dr. Porter of Fort Wayne, Dr. Buchtel of this place and Dr. Broughton and Dr. Harry Chamberlain of Waterloo. The bullet was not remaining in the neck as we had supposed. It had gone clear through his neck and had lodged in his coat collar, where it was found at the time. The X-rays had shown that the pieces of the bone were pressing on the spinal cord, causing paralysis. This operation was to relieve this pressure. The shattered bone was removed, and he may get well, but it all depends on how well he stands the operation. A few days will probably decide.

Flag Day.

There is a patriotic society in Philadelphia, working to raise a fund to purchase and dedicate to the Nation, the old residence of Betsy Ross, 239 Arch street, in that city. She was the lady who invented the plan for the first flag, substantially as our flags are now made. Her grandson, who has often heard her tell the story is assisting to get a detailed and correct history of it, which will soon be published. The association which includes many of the best names in the land, has already raised a handsome fund in contributions of 10 cents each on receipt of which the giver becomes a member of the association and receives a certificate. One flag day has been observed already. It was June 14, 1899. The dime can be sent to John Quincy Adams, the secretary, 239 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., who will give any needed information.

DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.

Gen. McClellan said in 1863: "If I could only get rid of drunkenness among the soldiers it would be equivalent to an addition of 50,000 men to the army."

It is not strange that our government should be so blind to the welfare of our army, should be so under the magic spell of the liquor power, as to nulify a law that would largely banish drunkenness from the army?

WHAT MEN HAVE NOT FOUGHT FOR.

My dear boy, men have fought, bled, and died, but not for beer. Arnold Winkelried did not throw himself upon the Austrian spears because he was ordered to close his saloon at 9 o'clock. William Tell did not hide his arrow under his vest to kill the tyrant because the edict had gone forth that the free-born Switzer should not drink a keg of beer every Sunday. Freedom did not shriek as Kosciusko fell over a whisky barrel. Warren did not die that beer might flow as brooks murmur, seven days a week. Even the battle of Brandywine was not fought that whisky might be free. No clause in the Declaration of Independence says a Sunday concert garden, with five brass horns and one hundred kegs of beer is the inalienable right of a free people and the corner-stone of good government.

Tea—mild, harmless, innocent, tea; the much-sneered-at temperance beverage, the feeble drink of effeminate men and good old women,—tea holds a higher place, it fills a brighter, more glorious page, and is a grander figure in the history of the United States, than beer. Men liked tea, my boy, but they hurled it into the sea in the name of liberty, and they died rather than drink it until they made it free. It seems to be worth fighting for, and the best men in the world fought for it. The history of the United States is incomplete with tea left out. As well might the historian omit Faneuil Hall Bunker Hill, as tea. But there is no story of heroism or patriotism with rum for its hero.

The battles of this world, my son, have been fought for grander things than free whisky. The heroes who fall in the struggles for rum, fall shot in the neck, and their martyrdom is clouded by the haunting phantoms of the jim-jams. Whisky makes men fight, it is true, but the usually fight other drunken men. The champion of beer does not stand in the temple of fame; he stands in the police court. Honor never has the delirium tremens, glory does not have a red nose, and fame blows a horn, but tever takes one.
—R. J. BURDETTE.

Home Remedy for Colds.

In every home there is usually a remedy upon which the whole family depend—in most households this remedy is Dr. Humphrey's Specific "77" for Colds and Grip—from the old folks to the little tots, they all take "77" and with the same result—the first dose restores the checked circulation (indicated by a chill or shiver) starts the blood coursing through the veins and so "break up" the cold. Always carry a vial of "77," it fits the vest pocket. A handy remedy is the stitch in time. For sale by all druggists, or sent on receipt of price 25 cents and $1. Good for Seattle.

Speaking of the next national meeting of the W. C. T. U. at Seattle, the secretary in Speaking of that city's liberality, adds:

Is there any other city where the chamber of commerce took such lively interest in the coming of the National W. C. T. U. convention? Among the writer's treasures is a certified copy of an ordinance passed (without one objection) by the city council, appropriating $500 from the city fund toward the entertainment of the delegates, and as they do nothing by halves, the warrant was issued and cashed into the W. C. T. U. treasury without delay.

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang ye, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER XI.

There has been but slim attendance at the band stand on evenings recently for obvious reasons. But the fair days have called out enough for quorum to do business.

Those who think the talk of the members is all gossip, should be present at a few of the meetings. Being mostly people of leisure, they have managed to pick up a fund of interesting and useful information. The ex-official remembers when the Vanderbilt roads got the job of Uncle Sam to run through, from New York to Chicago, a solid mail train with no other coaches. It was called the "White Line," and old residents of Waterloo used to go out and wait till it went through, generally about midnight, for it was a train worth seeing. Each of the big white cars was named for a governor of a state. After a time the "white train" was missed, and as a separate train was seen no more, though most of the cars are still in use separately, as needed. Just why the train was abandoned has been a matter not well understood.

But here the memory of the ex-official came in handy and he explained it and at the same time threw light on a much quoted and much criticised expression of the recently deceased Cornelius Vanderbilt.

As noted, the Vanderbits had been instrumental in putting this magnificent train on the main line they controlled then, the Lake Shore. It went on all right, but somehow the net profits of that especial train kept in the background. Vanderbilt wondered what was the matter. Finally, he did what he always did in such a case. He took occasion to examine the matter personally. He got on the big train and rode to Chicago. He saw how the postal clerks had to work for their lives from one big town to another, but between each place where they took on and delivered mail, there would be half a dozen smaller towns, that gave the big train no work, for it went whizzing through without as much as picking up a two-cent letter. Vanderbilt was learning a lesson in finance. A corporation doing work as a public carrier, must have the patronage of all the public, not a small part of it.

So, when he reached Chicago, he was thinking. He went to the headquarters of the road there, and ordered the "White Line" discontinued. All Chicago heard of it next day, and wondered. They did more, they objected, and a delegation waited on the railway magnate and asked him why he did it. "Because it don't pay," was his answer. "Oh, well, that may be, but what will the public say?" was the question of the delegation. "The public be d—d," retorted Vanderbilt. "If the public want it they must support it."

And this very natural and business-like view has been greatly criticised and misrepresented.

The Pioneer said everything is too practical now-a-days, as shown by this bit of Vanderbilt history. Now, when he was young, and the country new, it was different, Neighborly feelings, sympathy and a necessary interest in the welfare of all in a new settlement made them often do things they knew had no profit in them. The teachings and modes of the scripture had great weight always. He remembered, when a revival was held down on the St. Joe river, and Mrs. Jeremiah Rhodes was converted and brought into the church. But Jeremiah, although one of the best men in that group of pioneer worthies, was not a church member, and was still outside the fold. The preacher knew the value of a member like that and determined to have him. Four weeks later was another meeting, and the minister came with an extra strong sermon and text. He had chosen the words, "Take thirty men and go forth and bring Jeremiah up out of the wilderness." He knew Jeremiah was present, and he threw his whole soul into the most impassioned discourse the people had ever heard. And when he left, Jeremiah was in the fold.

And whether this story be true or not, the House was unanimous in its opinion that few better people ever lived in DeKalb, than Uncle Jerry and his wife, now long since gone to a better home.

He Got the License.

Yesterday a young man dropped into the auditor's office and upon being accosted by Deputy Nicolai as to what could be done for him, stated that he wanted a license. It being the day set apart by the commissioners for granting liquor licenses the genial deputy naturally took it for granted that it was that kind of a license the gentleman wanted. Mr. Nicolai inquired of the visitor whether he had published his notice as required by law; if he had his bond prepared, whether it was his first application, and other questions usual in such cases. As the questioning proceeded the visitor seemed to be more and more and more mystified, and several times remarked, "Why, I didn't know that was necessary." But the climax was reached when the young man was asked where he expected to begin business. He answered, with a rather wild look, "At Garrett," and then he seemed to realize that he had made a mistake. "It's a marriage license I am after," said he "Excuse me," said Mr. Nicolai, "I though you wanted a liquor license. You'll find the marriage license clerk up stairs in the court room." A few moments later the gentleman, still somewhat bored over the funny mistake that had been made, had secured the much coveted document and went on his way rejoicing.

C. E. Everett Discharged.

The following article is from a spe special to the Journal-Gazette, from Decatur, Ind., and dated Oct. 6:

C. E. Everett, former chairman of the republican committee of Allen county, and once candidate for governor, was discharged by the court today, on final judgment. Everett was charged with embezzlement, and was discharged on a technicality. After the first trial which resulted in a disagreement, the first charge was dismissed, and Everett was indicted by the grand jury. However, the warrant was not served until Mr. Everett next appeared in the court room. In the meantime, the time provided by the statue of limitations in which an arrest for a criminal act can be made, had expired, and the indictment, therefore, would not hold.

Essay of an Editor.

We look into the cradle and behold a male child. At the age of ten he is a noisy kid, with half the buttons off his pants and an eye for meanness. At the age of fifteen he is a devil in a print-shop; at twenty-five the publisher of a country newspaper; at the head of enterprises calculated to improve the town or enrich the business thereof; at thirty-five he is an emaciated and worn-out man, with holes in his pockets and a bald head; at the age of fifty he is a corpse in a cheap coffin, and his only resources left behind are two cases of long primer type, a Washington hand press and a subscription book of 500 delinquent subscribers, who line up and march past the coffin, saying: "He was a public-spirited fellow, but he couldn't save anything."—Ex.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers' and grandmothers' never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Billiousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sample bottles at O. P. Barber's, Corunna.

Horse Poisoned.

A. M. St. Clair lost a good horse Tuesday. Emanuel Stafford says they were threshing there and Al's horses were in the field nearby and feeding as usual. After awhile they started up and ran as if feeling good, kicking up their heels, when one suddenly seemed to spread out its legs and dropped, sprawling to the ground and in a few minutes was dead. They were at a loss to know what was the trouble. So Mr. St. Clair and Mr. Stafford opened the animal and found the stomach appeared to be eaten. It was brought to Dr. James Adams of this place, who says it is the result of a violent poison of some sort. Mr. St. Clair is at a loss to know who would do such a thing. He knows of no enemy or any reason for one.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

Dewey Confers with President.

When Admiral Dewey appeared at the White House, Wednesday, he was immediately admitted to the President's room and none were allowed to enter during the conference. Even Hanna was turned away. During the conference on the Philippines Secretary Long says Admiral Dewey declared the outlook favorable since more troops were being sent to the Philippines. He pointed out the necessity of a big blockading fleet and plenty of troops.

The President directed the immediate dispatch to the Philippines of a number of vessels of the navy, including the cruiser Brooklyn and two gunboats, Marietta and Machias.

The orders given are in line with the expressed determination of the President to furnish the army and navy every resource for stamping out the Philippine insurrection at the earliest possible time.

Manila special: Rear Admiral Watson announces the recovery of the United States gunboat Urdaneta, which was captured and beached by the insurgents near Orani, on the Orani River, where she had been blockading.

A Pressure for Peace.

London special: While there is no diminution in the flood of dispatches from South Africa, recording with almost tiresome iteration the military preparations and movements of both sides, with all kinds of accurate and inaccurate rumors and speculations, the real situation remains unchanged. It is evident that strong efforts are still being made to preserve peace, simultaneously with determined energy to be prepared for any emergency. It is expected that 5,000 reserves will be called out in a few days, and that an army corps will be mobilized on the 15th or the 20th of this month.

In the meantime, it is interesting to note that neither side shows anxiety to precipitate a conflict, but is rather inclined to give opportunity for the play of peace influences.

Parachute Jumper Is Killed.

Marza Townsend, an aeronaut, was instantly killed during a parachute jump at Des Moines, Iowa. The balloon began to descend when 200 feet from the ground. Townsend's assistant fired a pistol, the signal for him to cut loose. He did so, and the distance from the ground was not sufficent to inflate the parachute.

Prairie to Be Ready Oct. 15.

Ferdinand W. Peck, Commissioner General to the United States Commission, Paris Exposition, has been notified by the Navy Department that the cruiser Prairie has been commissioned to carry the exhibits of the Government to the Paris exposition. The Prairie will be ready to receive consignments Oct. 15.

Filipino Officials Help Our Troops.

Manila special: The establishment of local municipal governments by American authorities is having good effect. The American forces are receiving from the new Filipino officials advance information of all the insurgent movements south of Manila, and are able to anticipate them.

Canadian Troops Accepted.

THE NATION HONORS MANILA VICTOR IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

BIG NAVAL PARADE.

PAGEANT UP THE HUDSON IN DEWEY'S HONOR.

Grand Display Witnessed by Cheering Millions—Flagship of the Living Hero Pays Tribute to Grant—Scenes that Will Be Historic.

At New York Friday the greatest sailor in the world reviewed the greatest parade in American history. It was a triumph for Dewey, for the navy and for the nation. The victor of the seas sailed up the Hudson between miles of enthusiastic Americans to Gen. Grant's tomb and saluted the ashes of the victor on land. The admiral stood for hours beneath the ensign of Farragut and lifted his cap to the hundreds of thousands who cheered him.

The head of the naval column was a broad arrow. Six torpedo boats spread out as the bar, three on a side from the Olympia's quarter. Outside of them a flying wedge of police patrol boats formed a great V, the apex of which was the Olympia. Flanking them, ahead and astern, were the harbor fireboats, spouting great columns of water that turned threateningly toward the excursion boats on either side when they attempted to crowd the line of march.

Estimates place the number of people who witnessed the naval parade and the illuminations at more than 3,000,000. All the harbor glowed with red fire during the evening hours. Lanterns flinging their colored flashes from on high, electric illuminations of the Brooklyn bridge, and scintillating bursts of fireworks were signals of national pride. Saturday the admiral reviewed more than 30,000 fighting men of the navy and army, with the crew of the Olympia at their head.

ADMIRAL DEWEY IN THE LAND PARADE.

Not since Noah built the ark have so many people been afloat at one time. For a full hour the mighty Hudson from Harlem to the Jersey coast was packed with water craft till it looked like a log jam in a Wisconsin river. The big white warships were mere incidents. They were surrounded, overpowered and obscured by a countless swarm of smaller vessels. All the wise men of Gotham and 200,000 more went to sea in a tub, after everything else that would float had been filled.

All that is mysterious and fascinating about the life of men who go down into the sea in ships was in evidence. There were historic battleships, big, square-rigged sailing ships, coasting schooners which know every reef from Sandy Hook to Portland, ocean liners, the greyhounds of the sea, and even an old-time Yankee whaling brig, black and smelling of whale oil. But if the Hudson was filled, the shores on either side were covered and blotted out by the people. Chicago day at the World's Fair was lonesome by comparison. From the Battery to the Grant mausoleum at 123d street, and even beyond it, ran solid walls of black and white, constantly shifting and moving, in which it was estimated more than 3,000,000 people had a part.

Olympia Brings the Climax.

The climax of the day came when the Olympia, firing a national salute as it passed the tomb of Gen. Grant, swung to its anchor, and one after the other, the warships made the best of their way down stream. Dewey stood on the bridge of his flagship, as the New York, flying Rear Admiral Sampson's flag, swept by at the head of the line of fighting ships. For an instant the silent majesty of the great fighting machine awed the crowd, then the fleet of screeching tugs broke the restraint and swept round the Olympia again like a pack of hungry wolves.

At night the skies were blooming with fiery flowers. Great searchlights flashed from warships and from the towers of tall buildings, while in the center of Brooklyn bridge, in letters thirty-two feet high, the "Welcome to Dewey" was blazoned against the darkness. It was a great day for the sailorman. From a thousand masts swung the gay flags which spell, according to the international code, a welcome to the admiral.

The Land Parade.

Friday was Dewey day afloat and the navy marked the sailor hero for its own. Saturday was Dewey day ashore, and 5,000,000 loyal and adoring land lubbers, drawn from all quarters of the land and from every station in society, jammed and shoved for a chance to see the Admiral's face and in their ringing cheers tried to prove that the hero of Manila Bay belonged, not to the navy or the government, or the city of New York, but to the country at large.

The magnificent weather was repeated, Saturday, by a special dispensation of Providence. New York's swollen population was up early. Hours before the ceremonies could begin they were crowding the streets, apprehensive lest the Admiral, who could take a nation by surprise, had something up his sleeves to spring while they were still abed.

Battery Park began filling with people at daylight, and the mile from the battery to the City Hall Park was fringed with early sightseers. Ferries from Jersey and Staten Island and street cars from up town and Brooklyn, emptied their thousands into the city as the morning advanced. Business buildings were gay with flags, and the fronts of sky scrapers were banded with streamers which extended from roof to street. Everywhere, embedded in flags, the Admiral's face looked out. About city hall a mass of 50,000 people, pressed solid in its center, and on its outskirts surging and shoving for position, had gathered before the Admiral had arrived.

Promptly at 7 a. m. part of the reception committee, including Chauncey M. Depew and Richard Croker, proceeded to the Olympia for Admiral Dewey. He was ready, with Flag-lieut. Brumby. Both stepped aboard the committee's steamer.

A sudden screeching of tugs and ferry boats announced that the Admiral was approaching. As the little boat came into view a great roar went up from the crowds. Squadron A, the crack cavalry troop of Manhattan, was drawn up, brilliantly accoutered and ready to escort the Admiral's carriage. After the boat was tied up the Admiral was escorted to the carriage in waiting. The committee filled up barouches behind, and the cavalry trotted forward in the lead, with a blare of bugles. The procession moved at a moderate pace, giving the crowd a fine chance to see Dewey's face. The mile drive to city hall was one long ovation.

At 8:45 a. m., the Admiral's carriage, drawn by a pair of high steppers, rolled on to the promenade of the City Hall Park. A tremendous cheer arose, sounding like the broadside of big guns. It was a combination of cheer, yell and howl, and lasted for minutes without diminution. Admiral Dewey then descended from his carriage and was escorted to the city hall, where he was welcomed by Mayor Van Wyck. Here he remained for a few moments, meeting the cup committee. Then the party came back to the stand and in full view of the thousands who strained to see and hear all, the Mayor presented the loving cup.

Saturday brought to a close the New York celebrations in honor of Admiral Dewey. In the evening the crews of the Olympia and other vessels of the fleet were entertained at a smoker at the Waldorf-Astoria. Admiral Dewey left for Washington on Monday on a special train.

NEW YORK'S GIFT TO DEWEY.

Great Golden Loving Cup Presented to the Admiral.

Dewey's loving cup, presented to the admiral by the city of New York, is made of 18-karat gold, and as noble a tribute of its kind as was ever made to Roman conqueror. One of its panels has a portrait of Dewey supported by oak leaves and the spread eagle; another panel represents the Olympia at sea, and the third bears an inscription disclosing the purpose of the gift and the name of the donor. The handles of the cup are dolphins of gold. Its neck is embraced by a rope emblematic of the navy; about the rope are dolphins, oak leaves and moss wrought into numerous symbolic designs. The base of the cup proper is formed of four anchors resting on clustered oak leaves, which again rest upon a square base. On one side of this square base are engraved the names of New York's mayor and its eighty-nine municipal representatives.

NEW YORK'S GIFT TO DEWEY.

DEWEY'S ITINERARY.

He Was 118 Days Making the Voyage from Manila.

Admiral Dewey dropped anchor at home, after a voyage of 118 days, during which the Olympia touched at ten ports. Manila was left at 4 p. m., May 29. Three days later the admiral was at Hong Kong. There he rested till June 6, when the Olympia sailed for Singapore, arriving there June 11. The next port was Colombo, Ceylon, which was reached June 22. Six days later the ship left for Suez, where she arrived July 12. The next day Dewey reached Port Said and entered European waters. On July 20 he arrived at Trieste, to rest and enjoy the cool climate of the north for eleven days.

Naples was reached Aug. 5, and Leghorn Aug. 13. The next long stop was at Ville Franche, from Aug. 22 to Aug. 31. Here the crew were drilled daily for the big New York parade.

Gibraltar was made Sept. 4, and on Sept 10 the admiral started on the home stretch. The last leg of the voyage was made in surprisingly quick time, considering the Olympia maintained the comfortable speed of nine knots.

WAR IN VENEZUELA.

Government and Rebel Engagements Result in Victories for Each.

The Department of State is in receipt of a dispatch from the consul of the United States at Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, in which he gives a summary of the several encounters between the government and rebel forces in the country. The first encounter between the forces of rebel general Castro and those of the Venezuelan government occurred near the city of San Christobal, near the Colombian boundary line. The number of government forces engaged was between 400 and 500, under the command of Gen. Leopold Sarria, and that of the rebels is considerably larger. The rebels defeated the government troops and captured their leader, Gen. Sarria. The second battle was in San Christobal. The 1,000 troops of the government, commanded by Gen. Penaloza, engaged 2,000 rebel troops, commanded by Gen. Castro eight or nine days, resulting in Gen. Castro withdrawing his men. The third battle was before and in the town of El Cobre. Report has it that the rebels here defeated 1,500 government troops under the command of Gen. Morales, and that the General succeeded in escaping with but seventy-two men and the ammunition train.

The fourth encounter took place at Lunbados mountain, where Gen. Weidman with 2,000 government troops tried to stop the march of the rebels, reported to be 2,000 strong. The fight is reported to have ended in a draw, both sides claiming a victory. At any rate Gen. Castro continued his march. At the town of Cordosa, Gen. Castro was attacked by nearly 5,000 government troops, under Gen. Fernandez. His force then consisted of about 3,000 men. A terrible battle was fought, reports placing the loss of the government at nearly 1,500 killed and wounded. That of the rebels is thought to be less, as their position during the battle was superior. Again both claimed a victory.

CANADA'S BIG WHEAT SURPLUS.

Millions of Bushels Reported in Excess of Home Requirements.

The final crop estimates show Canada will have an apparent surplus of 50,000,000 bushels of wheat for export, as against 30,000,000 last year. But the actual surplus for export will be larger. Manitoba's crop, as estimated by Premier Greenway, is 60,000,000 bushels; last year it was 30,000,000. This season from 60 to 75 per cent. of the crop will grade No. 1 hard; last year less than 40 per cent. graded No. 1 hard, and as much of the crop was damp or tough wheat and unfit for making flour unless dried and mixed with sound wheat, less than half was fit for export. The wheat crop in Ontario this year is 21,000,000 bushels, against 32,000,000 last year. There is an increase in the goose-wheat crop of over 1,000,000 bushels. There is a large demand for wheat to ship to France and Italy for making macaroni. Many farmers who formerly cultivated barley for export to the United States have, since that trade has fallen off, taken to raising goose wheat, which now sells at a premium 3 to 4 cents over winter wheat.

Pranks of Thieves.

The fare register on a trolley car in Philadelphia was stolen.

The tin roof of a house in Manayunk, Pa., was removed one night.

Paris is laughing at a detective whose watch was stolen by a pickpocket.

While a funeral was in progress in Brooklyn a thief ran away with the coffin.

Seven barber poles were stolen one night from in front of barber shops in San Francisco.

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S NAME IN HUMAN LETTERS.

A unique feature of the Dewey land parade in New York consisted of 1,500 girls in a large, high stand at Seventy-second street and Central Park, so arranged that they spelled the name "Dewey." The girls in the letters wore white capes, and those forming the interstices and spaces wore blue capes, the effect being that the word Dewey stood out in white against a blue blackground.

PHANTOMS.

Whence do they come? What may their import be—
The flitting, flashing phantoms of the mind—
That half awake and half in dream we see;
That never can be captured or defined?

They hint at something lost, something desired,
Something whose ownership would make us glad—
Perhaps at thoughts with subtle meaning fired,
Or truths unrecognized because unclad.

They may be glints of half-forgotten dreams,
They may be memories long buried deep,
That from their ashes give out fitful gleams
Before they sink to their long final sleep.

Perhaps electric lines from other brain
Are tapped and flashed by crossing with our own,
Perhaps some floating shreds or bits remain
Of former life that we somewhere have known.

Perhaps they are the signals loved ones send
Who wait our coming on the other shore;
Too spirit-full with earthly sense to blend,
Too finely soft to fully pierce life's roar.

Perhaps! Perhaps! Conjectures cannot teach!
We clutch at shadows and we grasp the air!
The mystery is aye beyond our reach—
An ignis fatuus no art can snare.

All in Vain.

IT was in the middle of August we first met, Guy and I. My sister Margaret had been suffering from a general decline, and we, fearing consumption had marked her for its own, took her away to the seashore, hoping that the change would do her good. We had already been there three months when he arrived.

I loved him the first time I saw him; he was the ideal for whom I had been looking. We went boating, driving and walking together. It seems to me now that those six short weeks were a dream, or that we lived in Arcady. From early morning until evening, when the twilight shadows faded into night, we were together, and Margaret was with us.

At last the final week of Guy's stay came. He was to return to the city the following Monday. I felt very sad at the thought of his departure, though I looked forward to meeting him in the city. True, he had not spoken of love, but I knew; he did not need to speak.

"YOU'RE HARDLY A STRANGER," I SAID.

All this time Margaret had not improved. She seemed to grow weaker as each day sped by. One night we tempted her to take a little walk on the sands. The air was warm and there was a land breeze, so there was no fear of her catching cold.

As we walked slowly, we all grew silent. I was thinking of the future and what it might bring. Guy of his departure, and Margaret—I know now, only too well what her thoughts were.

"There is going to be a storm," I said, leisurely, pointing to a bank of dark clouds across the water.

"Nonsense!" said Guy. "You girls think every cloud means a tornado or cyclone."

We walked quietly along, each intent in our own thoughts, until Guy looked up, gave a sudden exclamation and shook my arm.

"The storm is upon us," he said. "Hurry, dear, hurry!"

The affectionate word escaped him involuntarily. The storm was indeed upon us. The sky was black with masses of quickly moving clouds. The wind howled and moaned, and in the distance we could see trees bent to the ground by its fury. The sea from time to time gave vent to sullen moans. There was no time to be lost.

I ran along the beach to where the hotel stood. Guy was helping Margaret. I had not gone many steps when I heard him call me. Turning I saw that my sister had fallen on the beach in a fainting fit.

We rubbed her hands and tried to bring her back to consciousness. In the meanwhile the storm was increasing and occasionally a large drop of rain fell.

"It is of no use," said Guy after a few minutes. "You must help me carry the poor child."

At the last word Margaret opened her eyes, and as she looked at him I saw in them a light that contracted my heart.

"You will save me, Guy, dear," she said, and again lost consciousness.

How we got her home I don't know. It seemed hours before we reached the hotel steps and delivered her over to the care of the trained nurse who lived in the hotel. Guy never said a word, but his face was very white. He, too, understood that my poor sister loved him.

For six long, weary days I never saw Guy. He had not left the hotel, but was staying, so they said, until the crisis of Margaret's illness was over, for she had been very ill, nigh unto death.

Then they told me that unless Margaret saw him she would die. His name was on her lips all through her delirium and every time a footstep passed the door she would turn her poor weak head to see if it was he at last.

I walked to the window and looked out at the now calm, quiet ocean. Should I do it? Could I do it? For one terrible moment fate trembled in the balance, and then I turned away feeling that hope was dead in my heart. But, my mind made up, do it I would.

He came to our sitting room in response to my note asking for a few minutes' conversation. I had resolved to meet him coldly; there was no other way.

"Mr. Faversham," I said, after shaking hands with him, "my sister would like to see you. I think you know why."

He looked at me, and his face grew pale beneath the bronze.

"I am glad to hear that she is so much better as to be able to see strangers, Miss Venetia," he said.

I moistened my lips, they were dry and burning, with a glass of water that stood on the table beside me.

"You are hardly a stranger," I said, with a smile.

Then, before I knew it he had me in his arms.

"Oh, my darling," he cried, "I love you—you! Don't you know it?"

I hastily disengaged myself from his embrace and stepped back toward the door. I could at least leave the room if it grew too embarrassing. He followed me.

"Do you mean to say that you don't care for me, Venetia?" he said.

I shook my head. I could not trust to words.

"I won't believe it," he said, fiercely. "Not if you were to tell me it 50,000 times over."

I summed up all my strength.

"I am sorry, Mr. Faversham, that you have misunderstood my sentiments and feelings toward you. They have been friendly, but nothing more. I have always regarded you as my sister's lover."

I could say no more. There was a long silence. Guy had walked to the window and stood there like a statue, stern and immovable. At last he turned.

"You wish me to marry your sister, Venetia?"

"It will save her life," I whispered.

"And you do not love me—you never could love me?"

"I shall always love you as a brother, Guy."

Without another word he left me. I listened to his step till I heard it in the distance like an echo, and then went to my room and prayed that I might die.

About three months after that fatal day we took Margaret home. She was much better; but my health had broken down so during her illness that the doctors recommended a thorough change for me; so three weeks after their decision I sailed for Europe.

I received letters regularly from Margaret and in each one she spoke of her improved health, and also mentioned casually that she had seen Mr. Faversham that day, or the day before.

At last the news came. They were engaged and were to be married very soon. I was not to come home, for they would join me to spend their honeymoon, that "Guy and my dear sister may learn to know each other better," wrote Margaret. Know each other better! Was not my cup of bitterness full enough without this added drop?

But it was written that I never was to meet the man I loved as the husband of another. Two days after they sailed from New York the gallant ship went down with all on board, my sister and her husband among them. My sacrifice had been in vain, for now I had lost them both, and my darling never knew how deeply I had loved him.

The Singer Not the Song.

The sentiment of a familiar song is as fully expressed by the music as by the words. In the singing of the national anthem by a mixed crowd, for example, it is surprising how few of the singers know the words of the songs that they are singing, and how well those who do not can get on without them. The most of the people in the crowd sing the words of from two to half a dozen lines, and then they go on with "Ah, lum tum tum, lum tum tum," for the rest of the way, and their fervor is in nowise abated by the loss of coherency in the lines. It illustrates that words are not the only means of expressing thoughts. The details of the poet's reasoning are of small consequence to the average singer. What he has in his mind is patriotic enthusiasm, and, given a stirring air, he can pour it out just as well through incoherent syllables as through logically arranged stanzas. When the orchestra of a theater plays "Hail, Columbia," the whole audience applauds rapturously. But it is safe to say that not one person in twenty knows more of the words of that song than——

Hail, Columbia, happy land!
Hail, ye heroes, Heaven-born band!

But does it follow that the rest of the air, as played by the orchestra, is meaningless to them? By no means. The sentiment of the first two lines goes through the whole musical composition for them, and they express it in their wordless singing.

Curiosities of Domestic Folk Lore.

Old fancies or prejudices—superstitions, if you like—still retain their hold upon the popular mind, and always will. These bodies of ours are favorite objects on which to frame the network of superstitious ideas. Every deformity, every defect, every unusual work or quirk which good Mother Nature has bestowed upon our bodies, has its interpretation according as fancy or experience may conceive it. Thus moles have been supposed to show good or ill luck, as they happened to be located on the body. A mole on the chin or neck signifies riches, while one on the chest signifies poverty. Itching of the nose denotes that a stranger will certainly call upon us. An old dramatist of Queen Elizabeth's time says: "We shall have guests to-day; my nose itcheth so." It is considered an ill omen to have the eye brows meet. Hence the poet says:

Trust not the man whose eyebrows meet,
For in his heart you'll find deceit.

Loss of children, health and property is thought to result from the sudden loss of hair. There is a tradition that Judas had red hair, and hence the old-time notion that a red-haired person was deceitful. Shakespears, in "As You Like It," alludes to this belief, when he makes Rosalind say of Orlando, "His very hair is of the dissembling color." In reply, Celia says, "Something browner than Judas'."

A Sagacious Elephant.

G. E. Peal states that he once saw a young elephant deliberately fashion a surgical instrument. He saw the animal in question go to a bamboo fence and break off one of the pickets; this picket it further fractured with its trunk and one of its fore feet until it obtained a sharp fragment some ten or twelve inches in length. Then, leaning forward on one of its forelegs, it thrust this fragment, which it grasped with its trunk, into its "armpit," and vigorously moved it to and fro. As a result of this operation a large elephant leech was dislodged, which dropped to the ground and was at once ground to mincemeat beneath the horny toes of the sagacious brute, which grunted its intense satisfaction!

Jessie, the elephant mentioned above, had some knowledge of pneumatics. One day I tossed a peanut, which fell to the ground some eight or ten inches beyond the utmost reach of her trunk. She stretched out this organ to its fullest extent toward the peanut, then blew through it a sudden, quick and powerful blast. The peanut was hurled against the wall, whence it bounded and then rolled beneath the feet of the intelligent animal, which at once swallowed. I tried this experiment several times, each time with a like result.—Scientific American.

Costly Pipes.

Muzaffer-ed-Din Mirza, the Shahinshah (King of Kings) who reigns over the kingdom of Persia, owns the most expensive pipe in the world. The Kallian, or pipe of state, which he owns and smokes on imperial occasions, is valued at $400,000 and is set with diamonds, rubies and emeralds of the costliest kind. Not only are the mouthpiece and the upper and lower portions of the snake-like tank of pure gold, enameled and set with the finest gems, but the water bowl and pipe bowl are equally splendid and rich with lavish jewel work. The Prince of Wales visited the Sultan of Turkey in 1862, and was invited by the Sultan to smoke a narghile which was inlaid with diamonds (valued at $15,000), and which was given to the Prince as a souvenir of his visit. A pipe made wholly of meerschaum and amber for Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria cost $3,000.

Ancestry Reaching Way Back.

The most exclusive set of Japanese nobles trace back their ancestry in some cases 2,500 years. Those dating back only 500 or 600 years are regarded as parvenus.

Descendant of Pharaoh.

An old gypsy has asked the Emperor of Austria to invest him with the dignity of King of the Gypsies, because he can prove his descent from King Pharaoh.

Bicycles Regarded as Carriages.

COURT HOUSE MOVED TWENTY MILES.

The County Court house of Bon Butte County, Nebraska, was recently hauled over twenty miles by rail from the town of Hemingford, where it was originally built, to Alliance, the new county seat. The building weighed over one hundred tons, but the transfer was made in less than six hours after the building had been raised from its original foundations.

The structure was erected at Hemingford less than five years ago. It was an elaborate building and the county was proud of it. Its dimensions were 40 feet by 50 feet, while it stood two stories in height, supporting a very heavy truss roof. When it was found expedient to move the county seat to Alliance, the only drawback was the loss of the new building. But the transfer was made and the records removed to the new site. It was then found the new building selected was too small, and that no other was available.

The building was first raised on timbers high enough to clear the surrounding embankments. Four large 50,000-pound capacity trucks were driven under the building and it was lowered upon them. To keep the building from swaying and thus weakening it, a set of double blocks and falls were adjusted over each corner and brought down to the opposite side, where they were fastened to 60,000-pound capacity coal cars loaded with coal.

ENJOYMENT IN OCCUPATION.

THE gregarious quality in a woman's nature is scarcely conducive to her happiness when fate or the exigencies of her life demand that she shall be much alone. Having cultivated a love of other persons' society, she becomes absolutely helpless when she is forced to depend upon her own. Without resources of entertainment in herself, she mopes and grows melancholy, with the result that her disposition is crossed and she grows old before her time.

Under these circumstances it is well for a woman at a very early age to endeavor to secure enjoyment in occupation. Books, sewing, the arrangement of her home, music, the care of pets, all help her to enjoy hours of solitude rather than fretting for the unattainable in the matter of human companionship. One's own thoughts can be so trained that they are as sentient as the most conversationally inclined individual.

The day spent in idle longing for someone to drop in or in wishing that she might go somewhere or do something gives to a woman that look of discontent that is fatal to beauty, and is futile so far as beneficial results, either mentally or physically. On the other hand, with good books for friends a woman is in touch with intellectual kings and queens. She is storing up treasures of memory that will be a never-failing source of pleasure when the twilight of life comes, and she must depend on her fund of reminiscence for her daily comfort. Occupation of the right sort is the greatest cure for loneliness, and a safeguard as well.—Philadelphia Times.

Club Discipline a Help.

In looking over the history of women for the past fifty years we note a fact which in a measure accounts for the slow recognition of woman's right to the ballot. By some strange inadvertence in sociological conditions the suffrage agitation antedated the club movement. Had these conditions been reversed, universal suffrage to-day would have been an accepted fact. Had clubs achieved what they have now accomplished when Susan Anthony, Lucy Stone and Elizabeth Cady Stanton first took the platform in behalf of suffrage, our political life would have been purer, better and more consistent with right principle from the active influence of women. By club discipline the women are ready from their increased intelligence about the various social and civic forces of the country to use the ballot with discretion.—Lippincott.

Leads a Full Military Band.

Miss Nellie Miles is probably the only woman in the world who directs and manages a full military band. She has decided to take her band, which numbers forty-five pieces, to the Paris exposition next year. Miss Miles is the composer of a number of musical works, and plays the piano, cornet, organ, xylophone, Swiss bells and violin. She is the daughter of the late Lieut. John Miles, of Company K, Thirty-sixth Regiment, New York Volunteers.

The Newest Sailor Hat.

The newest sailor hat is of white duck stretched over a frame, with narrow brim and low crown. It is decidedly smart and is designed particularly for wear with pique frocks. Pique is taking the place of mousseline de soie and chiffon as trimming. In bands on race coats and as revers on cloth dresses it is fast obtaining recognition as being extraordinarily fetching. Some daring modistes have associated it with foulard. The so-called ladder trimming, climbing up the front of the clinging skirt, is astonishingly pretty made of cream-colored pique over violet silk. Black velvet ribbon is extensively used for "ladder trimming," and is most effective over a panel of white chiffon.

Wash for an Oily Skin.

For an oily skin with large pores an authority advises washing every night with hot water and pure castile soap; then, with gentle massage, apply a good quality of cold cream. Glycerine is beneficial to some skins, but injurious to others, so every individual must note the effect upon her own. In the morning put about a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin in a quart of cold water, and wash the face and hands well in it.

Husband's Failings.

What bad form it is to talk of one's failure in home happiness! Even with intimate friends a judicious reticence is far the best, but there are women who talk to people who are almost strangers about their husbands' shortcomings. Every word they say makes the severance wider, for the spoken word reacts upon the speaker in a manner that has never yet been properly estimated, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. Silence is golden, indeed, when the thoughts dwell on the faults and failings of others. The very act of self-repression opens the door to gentle charity, and sets up a reaction against annoyance and vexation. It is a splendid recipe against anger to frame the best excuse one can for the person who has offended.

War Secretary's Daughter.

The family of the new Secretary of War is an interesting one. It consists, besides Mr. and Mrs. Root, of two sons and one daughter. Miss Edythe is the eldest, being just 20. She will probably be more or less seen in Washington society, as she will be reckoned among the ladies of the "cabinet circle."

MISS ROOT.

Save All Steps Possible.

In all housework, and in other work as well, it is important that the movements follow each other without any loss of time, that the distance to move be as short as possible—in other words, the work must be close together. Learn to save all the steps possible, and to move the hands as short a distance as possible. With so great a variety of work or movements as in housekeeping this is of the utmost importance to attain satisfactory results, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. These suggestions are offered by a practical woman who says housekeeping should not be considered drudgery. According to her views, as much taste and tact can be displayed by the good housekeeper as by the artist—in proportion as the desire to do work tastefully and in the most expeditious manner gains ascendancy the feeling that it is drudgery disappears.

Airing the Clothing.

An unhygienic custom is prevalent in some families of allowing children to sleep in the clothing worn during the day. The effete matter thrown off from the skin thus becomes a source of impurity to endanger the health and comfort of the child. When the clothes are removed for the night they should be hung up with the inner surfaces exposed, to be thoroughly aired before again being worn. Teach the children the necessity of ventilating their bedrooms by keeping their windows partly open, or by means of some simple device by which fresh air will be admitted at all times.—Good Housekeeping.

Women and Good Government.

Five years' experience with woman suffrage has so gratified the people of Colorado that the Legislature has adopted joint resolutions formally advising all the other States of the Union to adopt it as tending to the advancement of a higher and better social order. The resolutions declare that in Colorado better candidates have been selected for office, methods of election have been purified, the character of legislation improved, civic intelligence increased, and womanhood developed to greater usefulness by political responsibility.

Over-Attention.

Few parents realize that over-much care and attention to their children, when they are old enough to romp and play about, is really injurious. A child who is always watched and guarded becomes nervous and self-conscious and rarely develops the independent sturdiness of character which one wishes youth to have.

The shaped Spanish flounce will be more popular than the seamless.

For young persons whose figure will allow it the Princess gown will be the vogue in some of its many varieties.

Softness and flimsiness is the feature of the coming season; every fabric used must be flimsy and the woman who rustles is entirely out of style.

Next to stitched bands of cloth and of mirror velvet, the most fashionable trimming is fringe, both long and short. Folds, too, are worn; very narrow silk folds grouped in bands trim many skirts at the bottom.

Buttons are gaining a firmer hold and are used in surprising quantities, sometimes running from top to toe of the long straight robes; and some of them are so very pretty that one might well be pardoned using them excessively.

The new ornamental stitching is done by having an extremely heavy bright silk in the bobbin of a shade different from the outside material whose tint is copied in the upper thread. The effect when the lower stitching peeps up is of a tiny silk dot strung along the silk thread line.

The favorite model for the skirt is a seamless circular shape, fitting over the hips and back like a glove and flaring at the bottom to a width of from four and a half to five yards. The front breadth, which used to be cut straight to insure a good hanging skirt, is now flared in the skirts, which are made on the gored pattern, which will be very much worn.

SELECTING CIGARS BY COLOR.

It Is the Filler Which Regulates the Strength of the Weed.

"One of the most absurd ideas that the average smoker has about Havana cigars is the notion that the color of such a weed, be it light or dark, is indicative of its strength," said a large manufacturer of Cuban cigars to the writer recently. "It is no such thing. A light or medium-colored cigar is not necessarily mild or medium in flavor, for the simple reason that the color only refers to the outside wrapper, which in itself is of very thin and small quantity as compared with the other materials that go to make up the cigar. As a matter of fact, the fillers and bunch wrappers are the only parts that will determine the body or strength of the cigar. The actual strength, or otherwise, of the inner body of the cigar, the filler and bunch wrapper, is only known to the expert, and therefore when purchasing a cigar the smoker who is not a judge of the various grades of tobacco used to give a cigar its flavor should be guided in his choice of a mild, medium or full cigar by the manufacturer or the dealer. Not doing so, he will find that his own selection of a cigar from the wrapper is largely a matter of chance.

"The craze for light or dark colors has nevertheless assumed alarming proportions. The manufacturers, particularly those of Cuban-made cigars, are at present at their wits' ends to know how to grapple with the matter. Nature is very impartial and quietly ignores the fads and fancies of people in general. Tobacco leaves, like most things, are subject to the vagaries of the natural elements. A crop may give an undue proportion of dark, light or medium; except for color, all may be equally good. What is the manufacturer to do if he can only dispose of his light and medium and has to keep all his dark? He already threatens to raise the price of his lighter colors, in which case the smoker would be paying a higher price for by no means the best article. It might be reasonably assumed that as possessing the essential qualities of a good cigar the darker cigar is by far the best."

BRIGHT MEN HAVE BIG HEADS.

Phrenologists Agree on the Value of Large Cranial Development.

"All things being equal," said the phrenologist, "size is the measure of power. That is, a man with a small head cannot get to be President of the United States, nor can a real small man attain to that position. They have a comparison of the men who have been Presidents of our nation, consisting of the relative size of their heads and their respective weights, which goes to show that they have been tall men and that they have had large heads.

"Phrenologists also state that because a man has a large head it is no reason to believe that he has an unusual amount of brain power. But they say that he has the best opportunity for development and he can cram more learning into his head than the man with the smaller head. People with thin heads are usually ruled by late broad heads. The protuberance immediately above and behind the ears denotes executive force and ability, and a man with a narrow head has little of this power. The best lawyers and statesmen have wide, broad heads. The argumentative faculty, which is located in front on each side of the top of the head, is well developed in these persons, so that it gives the cranium its shape.

"You can generally tell whether a man is refined in his tastes by the width of his forehead above the eyebrows. If he has a good development above his eyes he is a man who knows what is going on in the world about him. You can tell a man's generosity and his sympathetic powers by the size of his head at the forward portion on top. You can also determine something about his own estimation of himself and his ability to stand by a point if he thinks he is in the right by knowing the exact size of his head from the middle of each ear to the crown. His fighting qualities and his ability to make his way in the world are denoted by slight elevations behind and above the ears. The size of a man's head is determined by running a measure around it just above the eyebrows to the back of the head, passing over the occipital bone."

Why Fishes Are Slippery.

Fish of almost every sort are, when fresh caught, slippery and hard to hold. This slipperiness is due to a sort of mucus exuded through the scales and is of the greatest importance to all finny creatures.

One of the important functions of the fish's slimy coating is to protect it from the attacks of fungus, a form of plant life found in all waters, salt and fresh, foul and pure. If the fish is so injured that some spot becomes uncovered by the slime, a barely visible fungus will be likely to lodge there, and when it is once lodged the process of its reproduction is very rapid. It soon extends over the gills and kills the fish.

The primary purpose of the slime of the fish is to reduce its friction when in motion through the water and increase its speed. It also serves as a cushion to the scales, which it thus protects from many injuries.

A New Weapon.

They have a novel method of catching rogues in Paris. A year ago policemen stationed at the crossings of the principal boulevards of Paris were provided with handsome white enameled "billies" and helmets. The patrols are now armed with a weapon new to the history of police annals. It is a piece of chalk. When surrounded by a crowd of hostile roughs, who hustle the guardian of the peace, the patrolman deftly puts chalk marks on the clothing of his assailants, who are thus arrested and identified when re-enforcements arrive.

Dogs Growing Weaker.

Experts agree that the life of a dog is shortened by close breeding and exhibition, and that we are gradually raising dogs that will not be so long-lived as the semi-wild mongrel types.

MONEY IN KEEPING GOATS.

They Live on Next to Nothing, and Are a Source of Good Profit.

Uncle Samuel's Department of Agriculture, in seeking out new fields of husbandry for the American farmer, has completed a curious and interesting investigation into the possibilities of an industry highly profitable abroad, but ignored in this country—that of goat raising for skins, fleece, milk, cheese and by-products. In a report the Department offers this slighted industry as a means by which the farmer can increase his prosperity and incidentally enrich his soil without cost. The department says that the conditions of climate, land and labor in most of the States of the Union afford almost unlimited natural facilities for the successful prosecution of this industry.

We use in our manufactures a constantly increasing amount of goat skins, but we produce comparatively none ourselves. Last year over 32,000 tons, or 65,000,000 pounds, of goat skins was brought in, chiefly at New York, and the average price in New York was 40 cents a pound, or a total value of $26,000,000. At four pounds to the skin, the average weight of dry skins, it requires the slaughter of 16,226,700 goats and kids to yield the skins imported last year. This represents live flocks of foreign goats aggregating from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 for our present supply of marketable goat skins alone. If all the goats in this country were kept solely to supply skins for market they would fail to supply even an insignificant fraction of the present demand.

The total number of goats in the United States is only about 500,000, and one-half of these are in Texas. One-half of the total number also are of Angora fleece-bearing stock, confined chiefly to Texas, Oregon, New Mexico, California, Colorado and Nevada. Few, if any, goats in the United States are raised for their skins.

The cost of keeping goats is less than for any other animal. They graze upon coarse herbs that are not eaten by any other stock, such as ironweed, dock, mullein, briars, buds and broken sprouts. The ease with which all breeds of goats can be kept fits them for many mountainous portions of our country where sheep cannot be sustained to advantage, while their ability and disposition to defend themselves against dogs give to them another great advantage over sheep. They are free from all diseases to which sheep are liable, are hardy and prolific, and experience has proven that they are adaptable to all parts of the United States. The feed of one cow will keep twelve goats. Cows must have certain food or they will not thrive. Goats will eat anything, almost, and still do well, and they have this great advantage also that their milk is not in any way affected by their diet.

FEMALE GOATS, 5 MONTHS FLEECE

The goat is a reliable and lifelong botanical scavenger, and can be depended upon to destroy the many undesirable products of cultivated and fallow lands—the abundant and persistent weedy vegetation which so incessantly besets the cultivated crops. Over 42 per cent of the land in farms in the United States is unimproved, amounting to over 265,000,000 acres, against 375,000,000 acres improved. Thus is presented a vast field for selection of favored localities in every part of the country, and much of the field especially invites the primitive occupation of herding, which precedes and prepares the way for agriculture, with inestimable benefit to the soil. In the aggregate, millions of acres of land, at present poor, rough, rocky and bushy, distributed through nearly all the States, call for subjugation and enrichment through animal occupation, preferably of the goat. They will furnish in abundance such forage as is suitable and preferable for goats. And under such conditions whatever profit can be derived from herding goats will come near being a total profit. Wherever foul land is regularly pastured by goats for a few years it becomes clean, weedless and bushless, and being evenly fertilized by them also, it usually runs naturally into nutritious grasses.

Gone Into Retirement.

Within the last forty or fifty years novels have undergone an extraordinary change, particularly in their heroines. This change in novels and their heroines is due, in a great measure, to the change in women themselves. These have ceased to be the romantic, sentimental, artificial beings they were even thirty years ago, and their reflex in fiction has been discontinued. The heroine of the period is not satisfied to look pretty and obey the fixed rules of etiquette; nor is the actual woman so satisfied, either. The actual woman wants to be somebody, to do something, to take some part in life; and she is and does, even if surrounded by luxury and bulwarked by influential friends. Many of the novels of the old type were weakening, if not demoralizing. Not so with the later novels, those of the present, especially. The better kind are intellectual, encouraging, stimulating, in a good sense, and teach valuable lessons of life.

It is surprising how many young looking people there are who have been married more than once.

UMBRELLAS

By good fortune we were able to purchase the sample line of one of the biggest umbrella houses in the west, and in consequence can offer you goods at from $2 to $2.50 that regularly would cost you $3.50 to $5. We can't do these goods justice here—they must be seen to be appreciated. Every style of handle imaginable—Ivory, Pearl, Dresden or Congo—all are here. Silk and linen tops of finest grade. Call and see them; buy one and you'll go away happy.

Wrappers and Housejackets.

Our Wrappers need no praise—they speak for themselves. The very fact that we have sold over 300 of our homemade wrappers the past year at $1.50 each, in the face of cheaper competition, is the best of evidence that they are cut full, fit well and wear well.

We now are making a fine line of housejackets in pretty flannelettes, in newest styles and invite our friends to call and see them.

Handkerchiefs

Although rather early to talk handkerchiefs, a glance at our line of dainty ones received this week will make you want them. They're not expensive—10, 15 and 25c.

Don't Cast This Bill Aside, but read it carefully and hang it up where it will be ever before you—it means dollars saved to you. When you come to trade, bring it with you and you will find each article just as advertised. YOUR interest is ours and only by square dealing can we merit a continuance of your patronage. When in Auburn, make our store your resting place. Whether you come to buy or not, yourself and friends are always welcome. May We See You Often.

President's Day.

The first session of the L. L. C. for the year's study always meets with the incoming president and the afternoon is in her charge, and the program and entertainment is to be furnished by her in any manner that she may wish, and is named President's Day. These days have always been very pleasant and enjoyable ones and the one last Saturday entertained by Mrs. Alice Lewis, was no exception to the rule. The day was an ideal one for such an occasion. The bright sunshine was reflected in the faces of the members as they joyfully greeted each other again after the long vacation.

After the members were called to order and the business transacted, the roll was called and each member responded by giving "vacation memories." These were interesting and varied. some grave and some gay, all of them given in an easy, informal way that made them entertaining. Mrs. Lewis had asked some of the members to assist her in the program, and Mrs Nettie Eckhart sang a sweet solo accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Nellie Hartman. Miss Stella Hague conducted a game of "Characters." She pinned on the shoulder of each lady present a name of some noted person whom she for the time represented, but did not know whom she was representing except as she might guess by the questions asked her and remarks made by those around her. This occasioned considerable amusement, and after all had guessed "who she was" the hostess invited the ladies to sit down to an excellent luncheon, which of course all enjoyed.

Among the many pleasures of the afternoon was the presence of several honorary members, Mrs. Helen Ensley of Indianapolis, Mrs. Lottie Cochran of Tucson, Arizona, and Mrs Frances Davenport and Dr. Vesta M. Swarts of Auburn. The members were especially pleased that Mrs. Davenport was able to be with them once more after an absence of nearly a year caused by long-continued illness.

The club adjourned to meet next Saturday with Mrs. Willis.

Circuit Court Notes.

Court opened again this morning with Judge Hartman on the bench. Considerable business was transacted in the way of getting cases ready for trial.

The grand jury was called. Marion Franks of Richland was excused from service on account of sickness and J. O. Davidson of Auburn appointed in his stead. After being charged by the judge the jury began its work with John Treesh as foreman. John Koons is the grand jury bailiff.

Two divorce cases from Butler came up for trial this forenoon. The first was that of Ella Huey vs. Walter Huey and besides being freed from her matrimonal bonds the plaintiff was authorized to resume her maiden name, Ella Simons. Albert J. Rimmel asked the court to give him a divorce from his wife Catharine. His request was granted, at his own costs.

It was noticed there were more attorneys present this morning than at any session for a number of years. Bailiff Husselman counted twenty-seven in the court room at one time.

A Thousand Tongues

Could not express the rapture of Annie E. Springer, of 1126 Howard-st., Philadelphia. Pa., when she found that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption had completely cured her of a hacking cough that for many years had made life a burden. All other remedies and doctors could give her no help, but she says of this Royal Cure—"it soon removed the pain in my chest and I can sleep soundly, something I can scarcely remember doing before. I feel like sounding its praises throughout the Universe." So will every one who tries Dr. King's New Discovery for any trouble of the Throat, Chest or Lungs. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drugstore, every bottle guaranteed.

SOMETIMES when you have lame back and feel poorly, you stop working for the day. But all you do is take the rest and go right to work again when the symptoms quiet down. That is no way to head off a terrible disease that is fastening its grip upon you. Stop the first leak or you lose the ship.

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver & Kidney Balm quickly cures those first irregularities and thus repels Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Rheumatism, Jaundice and Female Troubles. Druggists have it, $1.00 a bottle.

The St. Joe Muddle.

The people of St. Joe have been unfortunate on several occasions, but especially in regard to their incorporation. It will be remembered that last spring, after they had got their petitition of incorporation acted on by the board of commissioners an election was ordered, and the notice properly published. But before election day it was found that an error had been made in describing the boundary lines of the proposed town plat, so an amended notice was published for an election on a new date. The election was held, and it is supposed the matter was settled for good. But lately it has been found that the records in the commissioners' office do not show any correction, nor do the records of the town council of St. Joe. We have talked with one member of the county board, Mr. Gunsenhouser, and he does not think the amended description ever came before the board. Dr. Sheffer of St. Joe thinks the person who brought the amended description over from St. Joe thought he had got the matter fixed up all right and intended to take home the corrected paper to be copied into the St. Joe records, but either failed to do it or took the same old incorrect description.

This week the matter came before the board. Mr. Pomeroy represented the town of St. Joe and Rose & Rose the other side. The trouble is in the wording of the description. The original petition said the north boundary line is to run as far east as "the east line of the west half of the 'southwest' quarter of section 15," when it should have said "the east line of the west half of the 'southeast' quarter."

Pomeroy asked to have the word 'southwest" changed to "southeast." This would extend the town east a half mile farther. The town plat is now but a half mile square, when it should be a mile long east and west. They have gone on as if the people in that extra half mile were in the town, and any change from that is going to cause much trouble, not only there but to the auditor here, in getting the tax lists in shape. But the board of commissioners think they have no right to change the record they made, because it was made on the description given to them, and if the description was wrong it was not their work. The matter may get into court.

Notice of Hearing of Ditch Petition.

In the matter of the petition of L. D. Haynes No. 697 notice is hereby given that a petition has filed with Auditor of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and viewers have been appointed who have viewed and reported said view which is on file in my office. the same being the 2nd day of their November Term, 1899.

The prayer of said petition is that a ditch be constructed on the following route to-wit:

This proposed work will affect the lands of the follo wing persons:

Chicago Day.

Twenty-eight years ago Monday the city of Chicago was laid in ruins by a fire, the like of which the world had not seen since London was burned in 1666. So Monday was made the great day of the Chicago festival, and the editor and wife felt called on to attend. It was a great crowd of people so great that only a few could see the President lay the corner stone of the new post office. In the afternoon however was the great military and civil parade. Soldiers of all kinds were in line, volunteers and regulars, infantry, cavalry, artillery, marines, naval cadets, college military cadets, G. A. R. posts, uniformed K. P., clan nagael, etc., etc. All were led by numberless carriages in turn preceded by squads of police, headed by Chief Kipley, who seems as popular as Dewey We had the good fortune to meet the representative of the three nations of North America within a few feet of each other, President McKinley; Sir Wilfred Laurier, premier of Canada, and Senor Mariscal, state senetary and acting vice-president of Mexico, who came in place of President Diaz, whose wife is sick. It was a trio of representative men that one is not likely to see again and all are fine looking men. It is estimated that a million and over of people saw the parade. In the evening was the parade of all Nations, also a fine thing; it showed their costumes, etc. Saturday evening had been a big labor parade and Tuesday evening was the big industrial and business parade. Altogether there were four great parades. Thousands of seats were sold for seeing the parade and boys made some money selling seats on step ladders, also selling outright boxes, barrels, etc, for from 10 to 50 cents each. When the streets were full it was a funny sight.

"Every Advertiser Lies."

Is the general impression among people who do not read. Fortunately there are very few people who have eyes and do not read. The more one reads, the more one knows, and the more one learns. Now, if we failed to put this advertisement where you may read it, we would be doing you an injustice, for likely as not, you are this moment suffering, and you don't know what is the matter with you. After you have read this advertisement, go and spend 10 cents for a trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It costs ten cents a line to tell you any more about this, so we will not enlarge on this subject. Try us in this. You can get it of Davenport the Druggist.

A LIMA MAN'S STORY.

I have received excellent results from the use of Foley's Kidney Cure. It relieved my back-ache and severe pain over the hips. It toned up my system and gave me new vim and energy. I certainly recommend it.—WM FINN, 447 Elida Road, Lima, Ohio.

A Visit to Northern Indiana's Coming Metropolis.

The day was one of October's queenliest—bright sunshine flooded hill, valley, marsh and lake. A cool gentle breeze fanned our brows and gently stirred shrub and tree, now donning their robes of gold and purple under the persuasive influence of early frost. The roads were all that could be desired and as our carriage rolled along we noticed the rich fields of ripened corn now in shocks ready for the yellow harvest. We began to look for some sign of the promised city, and knowing that many had preceeded in the same quest we aimed to follow in their footsteps. After passing over several miles that showed no diverging path, we came to a farmsite and accidently noticed on the side of a weather-beaten barn a small board, about ten feet from the ground, rudely lettered with red chalk, "One mile to Hayward City" with a hand pointing north. We followed a well beaten track around the barn, across the barnyard and through a closed gate, down a long narrow lane where a gate again barred our passage. Opening it we entered a large sheep pasture, across which the beaten track still continued, and entered a wood of dead and green timber. The track wound among the trees and came to an abrupt stop at a big tent and a railroad track. At a short distance a few men could be seen unloading brick from cars, while others were laying the first brick in walls whose foundations seem to enclose an immensely large area. It was told this was the beginning of the great cement factory and that the building was twenty-one rods long by twelve rods wide, and that five-hundred or more men would be employed, and that dozens of carloads of coal would be used daily for fuel and that other dozens of carloads of cement would be shipped out daily. A little heap of sand or a pile of stone here and there indicated that some brave, enterprising individual contemplated erecting a house. At some distance through the trees I saw what appeared to be the walls of a house. I crossed a marsh and found the first business house of the place in an advanced stage of completion and learned that its owner had dubbed the place "Almira" after his wife or best girl. I also learned that a full mile and a half of cultivated fields or woods stretched between it and the nearest highway, yet front (?) lots were selling at $200 a piece, and that its one actual resident had lots of faith in its future which was participated in to no great extent by the writer. When its streets are graded, trolley lines started and free delivery inaugurated, I will describe it again. J. A. C.

Savages of the Gilbert Islands.

Notwithstanding its natural poverty the Gilbert group is the most densely populated archipelago in the Southern Pacific, having 35,000 souls within an area of less than 200 square miles. The people have a peculiar dexterity in the manufacture of weapons that have shark's teeth fastened to them with human hair, and, for protection from these dangerous instruments when wielded by enemies, they wear heavy armor of plaited cocoanut fibre, and helmets of the prickly skin of the porcupine fish. Trey frizz their curly hair up with a stick until it stands out like a crown, and tattooing has the greatest importance among them, a poor man properly ornamented in this manner having more social and political influence than a rich man whose surface is blank. One of their interesting customs enables a man to demand the sisters of his wife in marriage, but, on the other hand, he is required to marry his brother's widow. A widow always carries about with her the skull of her deceased husband to remind her of vanished joys. The largest island of the Gilbert group is eighty miles in circumference.

AMERICA'S THREE ADMIRALS AND THEIR FLAGSHIPS.

ALASKA IS FERTILE.

GROWING THINGS THRIVE IN OUR ARCTIC DOMAIN.

Gratifying Information from the Government's Experimental Agricultural Stations—Early Vegetables Excel in Flavor Those of the States.

The Federal Department of Agriculture has shown that fruits, vegetables and grain are being grown with profit in Alaska, and that our great Arctic domain offers enormous possibilities, hitherto unsuspected, for agriculture on a large scale.

Along the Alaskan coast the soil is capable of producing grain, vegetables, small fruits and forage plants of as good quality and in as great abundance as many of our Northern States, and of supporting countless herds of cattle. In southeastern Alaska is a region as large as all New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania combined, that is adapted in all respects to cattle raising.

The Government is establishing three agricultural experiment stations at different points in the Territory, to test thoroughly and scientifically the capacity of its soil for producing a food supply for its present and future population, and enable the Territory ultimately to become self-supporting with respect to the food it may need.

The stations are at Sitka, on the southeastern coast; at Kadiak, on Kadiak island, off the southern coast; and at Kenai, on the Kenai peninsula, beside Cook inlet, about 110 miles to the north and east. The conditions at Sitka represent all the heavily timbered region of southeastern Alaska, with its deep moss and peaty soil. At Kadiak the climate is somewhat cooler, and the soil less peaty, while in the Kenai peninsula there is a large area of agricultural land inside the coast range, which presents favorable conditions for farming, although it lies north of the sixtieth parallel of north latitude.

ALASKAN REDTOPS.

Last year the Department sent to Alaska a special agent, Prof. C. C. Georgeson, a native of Denmark. He made his headquarters at Sitka and Skaguay, and experimented with seeds of over 100 varieties of grain, vegetables, grasses and forage plants. He also distributed seeds to individuals in other localities in Alaska and made arrangements for co-operative experiments and reports as to the results obtained. All of the seeds were planted between May 18 and May 25. The season was backward, and it was impracticable to plant them earlier.

GROWN AT SITKA.
Oats, Barley, Flax, Potatoes and Clover.

Of vegetable seeds planted there were asparagus, wax beans, beets, cress, kale, lettuce, mustard, onions, parsley, parsnips, peas, radishes, rutabagas, rhubarb, salsify, spinach, sage, thyme, turnips and Windsor beans. All these, including in some cases several varieties of each, except the wax beans and spinach, made excellent growth and produced vegetables and plants that compared favorably with the products of gardens almost anywhere in southern latitudes. The peas were especially prolific, and the turnips, radishes, parsnips, parsley and salsify produced roots as good as can be found anywhere. Some of the turnips weighed five pounds each, and some even ten pounds, and were of excellent flavor. Potatoes also were a decided success. Many of them weighed each a pound or more.

A more important test, however, was made with grains and foliage plants. Oats and barley were grown at Sitka and Skaguay with gratifying results. Several varieties of Norwegian and Russian barley were grown with the same excellent result as with the oats. Of forage plants there were seeded several varieties of Norwegian clover, timothy, hairy vetch and Riga flax, and all were successful, the clover being especially vigorous, measuring over two feet high.

POTATOES GROWN AT KADIAK.

Alaska is pre-eminently a land of small fruits and berries. The flavor of most of the native berries is pronounced to be so excellent that it is said they are worthy of introduction into the States.

Cattle were introduced in Alaska long ago by the Russians in their various settlements, and, according to reports, they always did well. Professor Georgeson reports that the cattle now found at the little towns along the coast thrive and appear to have become well adapted to the climate. This excellent condition, Prof. Georgeson says, is evidence of the nutritious qualities of the indigenous grasses.

The soils of Alaska are largely of vegetable origin, and to a great degree resemble the black earth of rice lands or peat formations. In the southeastern portion of Alaska there are deep deposits of this rich soil overlying slate or conglomerate bedrock. The organic content of many of these soils is very much higher than in any of the agricultural lands of the States. If these soils are so situated as to be well drained they should be capable of producing enormous crops, and, with an abundant and well-distributed rainfall, they would be adapted to almost any kind of crop suited to the general climatic conditions of that portion of the country.

HOTEL SERVANTS ARE HONEST.

They Are Often Accused of Stealing, but Are Rarely Guilty.

"A curious thing happened here today," said the head clerk at one of the leading hotels in New Orleans to a Times-Democrat man. "About a month ago a gentleman and his wife, from Milwaukee, spent a couple of days in the house, and on leaving the lady missed a valuable ring. She was positive she left it on the dresser and equally positive it had been stolen by one of the servants. We set an investigation on foot and promised to forward the ring if found. A little later the husband wrote to inquire whether the search had been successful, and when we replied in the negative he notified us that he proposed to sue the hotel. He claimed we had shown great negligence in not arresting a suspected employe, and his comments were bitter in the extreme. That was two weeks ago.

"Now here is the sequel in the shape of a third letter that arrived this morning. He says that he and his wife reached home a few days ago and in unpacking the luggage found the ring in one of the trunks, and he is manly enough to add a very handsome apology for his hasty conclusions. Strange to say, that is the first time in the history of the house that any guest has frankly admitted such a blunder after taking his departure, and blunders of that kind are of almost weekly occurrence.

"It is the commonest thing in the world at all hotels for persons to go away declaring that they have been robbed by the help. We know the missing article subsequently turned up, because the subject is never referred to during later visits, but in the meanwhile a score or so of humble, but honest and hard-working people, have been placed under a suspicion that is wholly unwarranted and unjust. That is a point the average traveler doesn't seem to consider. Hotel chambermaids are continually returning valuables which they find in rooms. Dishonesty among them is so rare as to be almost unknown."

Lost Child of the Miamis.

In 1770, when a mere child, Frances Slocum was stolen from her parents by a roving Indian band at Wilkesbarre, Pa. She moved West with the ebbing tide of Indians and was finally adopted by a chief of the Miamis. Her parents searched far and near for their missing child, but were unable to locate her until she had been adopted by the Miami tribe, and when overtures were made for her return she declared that the life in the Indian camp had such a fascination for her that she had no desire to return to civilization. She was extremely popular among the members of the tribe, and the village southwest of Wabash, Ind., where she made her home was known as the "white woman's" village. As she grew to womanhood, adopting the savage customs, attire and language, she married She-pan-can-nah, meaning the Deaf Man, the chief of the Osage village, and by him had four children, two sons and two daughters. She accompanied her husband to the Osage village and afterward to the Deaf Man's village, and lived there long after the white man had invaded the wilderness and begun to clear up the dense forests.

She-pah-can-nah died in 1833, and in 1847, fourteen years after, she died at the age of 80, loved and respected by whites and Indians alike. Frances Slocum's Indian name was Mah-one-squah, or "Young Bear." Her daughter, Ke-ke-kah-kushwa, became the wife of Capt. B. Brouillette, and died on March 13, 1847, aged 47. The other daughter was O-zah-was-shing-quah, who married Tah-co-nah, and he dying she became the bride of Wah-pah-pe-tah, and several of her children by the last marriage live on the Indian land south of Wabash in abject poverty. She died in January, 1877, the last of Frances Slocum's children.

Home of the Edam Cheese.

While the Edam cheese is a familiar visitor on the table, not every one knows whence it comes nor how its cannon ball proportions and gay coloring have been achieved. The northern part of Holland is the seat of the Edam cheese industry, and the consequent cleanliness of the relish is therefore doubly assured. In making it the fresh cow's milk is carefully strained and the renet added. As soon as the milk curdles the whey is drawn off and the curd, thoroughly kneaded, is pressed into molds. This process is repeated until the whey has all been extracted and the curd is comparatively dry. It is then wrapped in a linen cloth and kept for ten or twelve days until quite solid. Then the cloth is removed and the cheese put into salt lye. Afterward a little more dry salt is sprinkled on the cheese, until the maker thinks it is salt enough to insure its keeping. It is next put into a vessel and washed with whey and scraped to remove the white crust. It is next carried into a cool room and laid on shelves, where it is frequently turned. The ripening process lasts from two to three months, the round balls growing the fine yellow or reddish color peculiar to Edam cheese. The cheeses intended to be exported to this country are rendered still more brilliant by dyeing the rind with a vegetable dye.—New York Tribune.

Queer Jap Funeral.

Lieut. Yoshibumi Fukagawa, of the I. J. N., left behind a curious request to his family a few days prior to his death, which occurred the other day in his native district of Hizen. He observed to his family that as he had never had the time to investigate religious questions deeply enough to enable him to determine which faith he should embrace, he was neither prejudiced against nor partial toward any form of religion. However, he himself was of opinion that his soul would perish with the cessation of his life, while his remains would crumble to dust. Therefore he did not wish to have any religious service performed on his behalf. The funeral, also, should be as simple as could be; and flowers and similar offerings be strictly declined. No announcement should be made of his death to friends of his until four or five days after the funeral. Two or three weeks after his death his relatives and friends should be invited to a banquet, and they should be asked to join the occasion as heartily as possible. A priest might be invited, if the presence of such a personage was deemed desirable. At the funeral, also, nobody should accompany the bier; except, if considered necessary, one or two representatives on behalf of the family and relatives might follow the remains to the grave. The tomb was to be of the simplest description, only his name being inscribed upon it. A memorial tablet was entirely tabooed.—Japan Times.

Do Not Suffer from Heat.

It has often been said that the capacity of the negro race for enduring heat has never been fully tested. An incident related by a dairyman living on the outskirts of the city seems to bear out this assertion. He has a young negro boy, who looks after the cattle and does chores around the place. The only effect that the heat produces in his case is a desire for slumber. The dairyman had a young calf in the barnyard and as the sun was pouring in on the poor animal his wife sent "Carlina" out to turn the calf loose, so that he could seek a shady spot. After waiting an hour for his return the house wife went to the barnyard to investigate. There she found both boy and calf curled up in the hot and stifling barnyard. The calf was dead from the effects of the sun, but the boy was slumbering peacefully by its side.

While a negro can stand any amount of heat on his head, he loves to cool his heels. It is a common sight in the winter to see a negro boy on a frosty morning with his head bundled up to keep out the cold and at the same time walking unconcernedly along the frosty ground in his bare feet. One of the hottest places in the city on a hot day is at the lumber wharves of the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad. When the men knock off for noon they frequently take a nap with their faces upturned to the rays of the blazing sun; at the same time they get their feet under the shadow of some friendly lumber pile.—Florida Times-Union.

A Real Genius.

The man that sharpened shoe pegs at both ends and sold them for wheat was a genius, but he has his equal in Mexico. Some time ago one of the habitual revolutionary flare-ups was about to commence in one of the belligerent little South American Presidencies which masquerade under the title of republics. A couple of hundred men marshaled in opposition to the government, swore solemn oaths, and met nightly in an abandoned hut at the entrance to a swamp. Enthusiasm was plentiful, but arms were scarce; so a purse was made up, and three of the party set off to buy ammunition.

They went to Mexico, where a cargo of powder was delivered to them, and, after inspection, was shipped to the revolutionary headquarters. A signal gun was mounted on a hilltop, and when the day and hour arrived the field marshal of the revolutionary army touched a match to the fuse of the piece. There was no response. The marshal used all the matches in his silver matchbox, but the gun refused to fire. An investigation by the "War Office" followed, and that cargo of powder proved to be nothing but mahogany sawdust, which had been vigorously stirred up with powdered graphite to give it the proper color and appearance.

Dead Languages.

There are certain languages which although they are still spoken and written in, are to all intents and purposes dead. For instance, Icelandic is practically identical with the dead Norse language, out of which the Scandinavian tongues have grown. So, too, Provencal, the ancient language of Provincia, and the speech in which the troubadours sung, has now sunk to the level of a patois, although a certain French literary school is making efforts to revive it as a literary language. Hebrew, again, though still spoken, is to all intents and purposes dead in the sense that Greek and Latin are. Cornish, Manx and the old, mysterious Romany tongue are also examples which should be mentioned.

SOLDIER WEDS A PORTO RICAN.

A Romance Which Developed from the War with Spain.

Love and war sometimes work to strange ends. Cupid and Mars often go hand in hand. A romance of the recent war with Spain is developing its second chapter in Grand Rapids.

The principals in this romance are a soldier and a little Porto Rican senorita. The soldier was a private in the Nineteenth United States Infantry. Previous to his enlistment he was a barber in Grand Rapids. He is now a worker in a furniture factory and his bride, the daughter of Senor Carlos Gensana, alcade of Ponce, is trying to be happy as she can under the circumstances. Before her marriage the bride had never been beyond the shores of her native island. Her new life must be as strange to her as would be life in another planet.

Three years ago, before the war with Spain was even looked upon as a possibility, George Martin, then working at his trade as a barber, grew tired of civil life and decided to become a soldier. He enlisted under Lieut. Rowan and was assigned to the Nineteenth Infantry, then stationed at Detroit. When the war with Spain broke out the Nineteenth was hurred South. While waiting for orders to advance where hostilities were active Martin was stricken with fever and was taken to a division hospital. His regiment was dispatched to Porto Rico with Gen. Miles, and Martin, still a patient, but eager to join his command, sailed soon after.

When active hostilities in the island ceased time began to hang heavy upon the hands of the soldier. Martin decided to resume his trade. He opened a little barber shop in Ponce and soon prospered. About this time Martin discovered that many of the Porto Ricans were anxious to learn the language of the conquerors. He started a class in English, which became so popular that the soldier rapidly advanced from barber to an instructor and some of the best families in Ponce furnished the pupils.

SENORITA MERCEDES GENSANA.

All went well until one day he was summoned to the home of the alcade. It was a beautiful residence of stone and marble, luxuriously furnished and containing evidences of good taste and refinement. The alcade introduced the teacher to his daughter, a pretty, dark-eyed senorita, and it was to teach the Senorita Mercedes Gensana the English language that the soldier had been summoned. The American was tall, stalwart and good-looking. He fell in love with his pupil while she was conning her lesons. She had a susceptible heart, and early it became manifest that his affections were returned. The courtship was pursued under difficulties, with members of the family always in attendance when the tutor was present. In course of time the Americano asked the venerable alcade for the hand of his daughter, and the prize was readily bestowed upon the young citizen of the rich and powerful country whose flag floated over Porto Rico.

The wedding which soon followed was one of the most brilliant which the city of Ponce ever witnessed, as befitted the favorite daughter of a citizen so prominent and so wealthy. It was attended by the elite of the city. Martin's comrades were there to the number of 200 or more. The festivities continued several days, and when the bells ceased ringing the senorita had become an American bride.

Soon after Martin and his bride sailed for the States and came directly to Grand Rapids. The soldier's term of enlistment had expired. He was offered a commission in a new volunteer regiment recruiting for the Philippine service, but declined. He is now working as a sand paperer in one of the furniture factories, and his southern bride is adapting herself as best she can and most heroically to her new station in life as a poor man's wife.

An Arctic Bill of Fare.

The Arctic region is no place for epicures. The men who explored Franz Josef Land under the command of F. G. Jackson were by no means dainty in their tastes, but their leader tells us in his diary, that during the long winters, when the birds had migrated to the south, monotonous was not the word to describe the bill of fare.

We are none of us in love with walrus meat. It is very tough, coarse and dark in color, and has a distinct flavor of iodine. Every day I am having all the blood of the animals killed kept and frozen. Every day a pound or so of the frozen blood is chipped out with an axe and added to our soup. The fat of the walrus we find peculiarly unpleasant.

I should like to place either walrus or bear, cooked a l'Arctic, before a London club man, and be privileged to watch his expression and hear his remarks.

There, was it not as I told you? And he has broken his club. Now, what will the golfer do? It is hard to tell exactly, but if he turns round and sees the grin on the face of his caddies he will do things for which he will be sorry later. See, he is about to turn. Let us go away, Tommy. I hate to hear a caddie crying.

WIND FAILS YACHTS.

FIRST OF THE CUP RACES A DISAPPOINTMENT.

Boats Unable to Finish Within the Prescribed Time Limit—Contest Becomes Finally a Mere Drifting Match—Fluky Breezes the Cause.

A fickle wind that blew by fits and starts made a fluke of the first of the races for the America's cup between the Columbia and the Shamrock, and it left them three miles from home when the time that they had under the rules to finish the course had elapsed. For the tenth time in the history of the America's cup the British Tuesday tried to win a battered piece of silverware. Its intrinsic value is only a few hundred sovereigns, yet hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in efforts to win it back. Sir Thomas Lipton, a man of millions, whose boast has been that he never failed in anything he undertook, is the latest Britisher to try and win back the cup and re-establish English supremacy on the seas.

AMERICA'S CUP.

Ever since the year 1851 there has been a silver cup twenty-four inches tall and weighing 100 ounces in possession of America's yachtsmen, which Englishmen have eagerly coveted. This aged bit of metal represents the yachting championship of the world and was first won by the schooner America and subsequently defended with success by nine craft representing the flower of American yachts. In 1871 the schooners Columbia and Sappho jointly represented this country. On all other occasions but one boat carried American colors to victory. Ten contests have been sailed, ranging over a period of forty-four years. The last series of races was sailed in 1895, when the sloop Defender beat Lord Dunraven's cutter Valkyrie III.

The wind alone was to blame for the failure of Tuesday's yacht race, neither the Columbia nor Shamrock being able to reach the line within the five and one-half hours allotted by the rules as limit time. Everything that British or American skill could devise in the way of preparatory work was done long before the yachts were given the word to cut loose from their moorings and make sail for the Sandy Hook lightship, the starting point of the race. The course selected for Tuesday's race was a sail of fifteen miles to windward or leeward and return.

After starting almost a minute behind her rival, Columbia had overtaken, passed her, and had rounded the stakeboat two minutes ahead. On the run home, Shamrock, by fine handling and good luck, had overtaken Columbia, had gained the lead, lost it again, and gained and lost it again. When the five and a half hours, within which the rules said the boats must cover the course, had elapsed, the two were so near together that an apple could have been tossed from one to the other. A moment before this Columbia had poked her nose ahead of Shamrock. They were on almost even terms when the whistles were blown that announced the end of the time. Shamrock was perhaps a few feet, maybe a third of a length, in the lead.

Except for the failure to cover the course in the prescribed time, it was what the experts called a satisfactory race in every way. On the whole, it may be said that Columbia showed to better advantage, for on the run out over the fifteen-mile course she gained steadily, and on the beat back Shamrock had all the luck with the fickle breezes, and yet at the end was only on even terms with Columbia. In spite of the fact that the wind made a fluke of it, the race made as fine a day's sport for the thousands who went to see it as ever a yacht race made, and it was a day full of excitement.

To the unprofessional sport there is something deliciously absurd in the solemnity with which the yachts are inspected and measured and handicapped before the race. A committee of experts, after a day's hard work with a tape, decrees that one vessel must have six seconds' start of the other, because it is a foot longer or shorter somewhere—and then both vessels take their chances of being becalmed or fouled by a great fleet of steam craft carrying excursionists, and the outcome of the race seems as likely as not to depend upon the luck that one or the other has in keeping out of the way of these craft.

Tuesday, according to the press reports, the wind was twice taken from the Columbia's sails by the steamers that crowded around her and in the last race the wash from a big steamer interfered with the navigation of one of the contestants. In view of the actual handicaps in the shape of excursion boats the official time allowances look ridiculous. It is something like handicapping a man in a bicycle race and then driving a coal wagon in front of him. And, after all, there was no race because there was no wind

RETAINS THE ORINOCO.

Venezuela Wins the Vital Point in the Boundary Dispute.

The Venezuela boundary arbitration court, sitting in Paris, rendered its decision Tuesday. The court in effect splits the difference between the extreme claims of the parties. Venezuela retains the mouth of the Orinoco, which was the vital point of the controversy, yet the Venezuelans are already crying out that might has overcome right. On the other hand the English are very well satisfied, having obtained all they really expected.

Venezuela saves Barima Point, the boundary line starting about thirty-five miles east thereof, thus preserving the mouth of the Orinoco, besides a large tract of country within the Schomburgk line which England absolutely claimed. Great Britain on several occasions refused to consider arbitration regarding territory within the Schomburgk line. This included the right bank of the Orinoco river, the command of which gave Great Britain control of the mouth of the great river. It was this claim that especially aroused the interest of the United States. If it was acknowledged, then southeastern Venezuela in a commercial and military sense would be subjected to the control of Great Britain. This was the crux of the controversy. The retention and complete control of the Orinoco was essential to Venezuela's independence.

The decision of the tribunal, in addition to control of the Orinoco and the coast line eastward, gives Venezuela all the territory westward of the Schomburgk line, which Great Britain claimed, but was willing to submit to arbitration. In addition Venezuela gets 4,000 or 5,000 square miles in the interior eastward of the Schomburgk line in the territory that Great Britain would not originally submit to arbitration.

It is not easy to realize that at one time the Venezuela dispute was acute enough to threaten war between Great Britain and the United States. Under the Monroe doctrine Great Britain could not be allowed to annex territory on this side the title to which was in dispute, for that would amount to an illegitimate extension of European influence in this hemisphere. Once arbitration was accepted our national interest in the dispute lapsed. It was a matter of indifference to us which party ultimately possessed the territory, provided the possession was rightful. The proceedings at Paris have excited no public concern, for the outcome could not affect the essential principle of the case. The decision is immaterial; the method of reaching it involved the recognition or rejection by Great Britain of the Monroe doctrine.

RESUME WAR ON FILIPINOS.

Lawton and Grant with Strong Armies Clear Trenches at Imus.

The attacks of the Filipino insurgents on the American troops in Cavite province, in which one officer and a private have been killed and eleven privates wounded, had their sequel Tuesday when Gen. Grant moved out from Imus toward Bacoor. Gen. Lawton drove the insurgents up the Imus road and crossed the river. Meanwhile three companies of the Fourth infantry advanced from an opposite direction on Imus and soon the island between Bacoor and Imus and the river banks was clear of rebels. The enemy fell back on San Francisco de Malabon and Cavite Viejo. One American officer and a private were wounded.

A dispatch from Negros reports that Capt. Poore, with a company of the Sixth infantry, attacked the rebels at Labun. Twenty of the enemy were killed and 5,000 Mauser and 1,000 Remington cartridges captured, in addition to twelve rifles and some supplies of foodstuffs. One American officer was killed and one officer and three privates wounded.

The scene of the operations described above is in Cavite province, between Bacoor and Imus. Bacoor is on the shore of Manila bay, southeast and across Bacoor bay from Cavite. Imus is about eight miles directly south of Bacoor. Cavite Viejo lies at the bottom of Bacoor bay, south of Cavite. San Francisco de Malabon is about eight miles south of Cavite Viejo and the same distance west of Imus.

The rebels who have been annoying Gen. Grant's forces came from the west end of Cavite province and from south of Imus. They have plainly been trying to break through the American line from Imus to Bacoor, so as to get into the country directly south of Manila and toward Laguna de Bay. The central part of Cavite province is cut up by the affluents of the Zapote, Bacoor and Canarchite rivers, all of which fall into Manila bay east of the Cavite peninsula. The "island" spoken of is formed by the Bacoor river and a branch of its main affluent, the Tibagar, which rise in the country between Perezdasmarinas and Laguna de Bay and unite about three miles south of Bacoor.

When the Americans advanced into Cavite province the rebels made their stand at the Zapote river, were routed, and fled south and west. The Americans then advanced through Bacoor and San Nicolas and Imus to Perezdasmarinas. The last place was soon abandoned on account of the swampy nature of the country. The Americans did not attempt to take possession of the west end of Cavite province, and the rebels have retained posts at Novaleta, four miles southwest of Cavite Viejo, and at other points further west and south. The Americans also cleared the rebel vessels off of Laguna de Bay and have occupied Calamba, at its southwestern corner.

Saw a Way to Make Money.

A worthy American citizen, having made a fortune, fared forth to see the world. European business ways and habits thoroughly disgusted this nervously keen expert in money-making and he poured forth his scorn to some friends he met in Paris. One of them, knowing the ignorance of the old gentleman on subjects without the circle in which he had lived, ventured on a joke.

"I agree with you," he said. 'I agree with you thoroughly. Why, do you know, sir, I was last week in a city of 125,000 inhabitants—and I was overcome, sir—overcome to find they hadn't a livery stable in the city."

"No—you don't tell me!" answered the victim. "Gentlemen, see there! Just consider that!" Then, jumping to his feet, as the thought struck him: "Why, gentlemen, a fortune's awaiting someone there! Where's the place? What's the name of it?"

"Venice," said the joker.

"Good! I'm tired of this place, anyway. I'll go right down there to-morrow, and put a little horse sense into that town. Gentlemen, you're in this good thing with me if you choose."

They were all in it and they invested their friend with powers plenipotentiary. The story has no dramatic point, save that it's a historic fact that Venice was visited. No one ever heard an account of that visit, but for long afterward no participant in the joke could get within hailing distance of the self-appointed pioneer of American enterprise.—Harper's Round Table.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FREE.

One of the Grandest Offers Ever Made.

The first five persons procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book from their grocer will each obtain one large 10c package of "RED CROSS" starch, one large 10c package of "HUBINGER'S BEST" starch, two Shakspeare pictures, printed in twelve beautiful colors, as natural as life, or one Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, the finest of its kind ever printed, all absolutely free. All others procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book will obtain from their grocer two large 10c packages of starch for 5c, and the beautiful premiums, which are being given away. This offer is only made for a short time to further introduce the famous "RED CROSS" starch, and the celebrated "HUBINGER'S BEST" cold water starch. "RED CROSS" laundry starch is something entirely new, and is without doubt the greatest invention of the twentieth century. It has no equal, and surpasses all others. It has won for itself praise from all parts of the United States. It has superseded everything heretofore used, or known to science in the laundry art. It is made from wheat, rice and corn, and is chemically prepared upon scientific principles by J. C. Hubinger, an expert in the laundry profession, who has had twenty-five years of practical experience in fancy laundering, and who is the first successful and original inventor of all fine grades of starch in the United States. If you would have the best, ask for "RED CROSS" and "HUBINGER'S BEST," which are the finest starches on the market to-day. The jobbing houses all handle it, the retail grocer has it on his shelves, you find it in all the homes, while the careful housewife has adorned the walls of the house with the beautiful Shakspeare pictures which are being given away in introducing "RED CROSS" and "HUBINGER'S BEST" starch.

The Philippine War

Is proving more stubborn than anticipated. It needs a vigorous contest to straighten matters out. We should tackle the Philippines and overcome them as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters does dyspepsia, indigestion, malaria, fever and ague. The battle is short and decisive, and for fifty years the Bitters have always won.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 18,992]

"DEAR FRIEND—I feel it my duty to express my gratitude and thanks to you for what your medicine has done for me. I was very miserable and losing flesh very fast, had bladder trouble, fluttering pains about the heart and would get so dizzy and suffered with painful menstruation. I was reading in a paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I wrote to you and after taking two bottles I felt like a new person. Your Vegetable Compound has entirely cured me and I cannot praise it enough."—MRS. J. O. BARNARD, MILLTOWN, WASHINGTON CO., ME.

"I tried three doctors, and the last one said nothing but an operation would help me. My trouble was profuse flowing; sometimes I would think I would flow to death. I was so weak that the least work would tire me. Reading of so many being cured by your medicine, I made up my mind to write to you for advice, and I am so glad that I did. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and followed your directions, and am now well and strong. I shall recommend your medicine to all, for it saved my life."—MISS A. P., BOX 21 ABBOTT, IOWA.

Out in Kansas

lives a happy wife. She writes: "I have used Mother's Friend before two confinements. The last time I had twins, and was in labor only a few minutes. Suffered very little." The reason why does expectant mothers so much good is because it is an external liniment, to be applied upon the outside, where much of the strain comes. It helps because the pores of the skin readily absorb it, and it comes into direct contact with and is absorbed by the parts involved. Morning sickness is quickly banished, and nervousness is kept completely away. The sense of dread and foreboding is not experienced, even during labor itself. Confinement is short and almost without pain. Recovery is quick and sure. Best of all, Mother's Friend benefits the unborn just as much as the expectant mother, and when the little one comes it will be strong, lusty and healthy.

Mother's Friend

—Several loads of good wood have been received at the COURIER office this week on subscription. We can find room for more before the roads get bad.

—Gov. Mount will appoint a successor to Hon. C. M. Dawson as judge of the superior court of Allen county. Several republican attorneys of Fort Wayne are anxiously awaiting his decision.

—Walter Hartman has purchased Merry Monk, a standard bred trotter at Noblesville, Ind., and will use him as a roadster. The horse has a good track record and is a magnificient animal.

—Marsh Andress of St. Joe caught a pickerel in the St. Joe river the other day that weighed eleven pounds. Several Auburn fisherman are preparing to cast a line in that classic stream.

Richer than any Klondike ore, is a car load of gold ore from the new Black Hills mine, that was shipped to Denver the other day. It was good for $85,000 And the best is, there is plenty more where that came from.

—Henry Shipe of Fairfield was here today with his son looking for school books which it appears are in some cases not easy to find. He took advantage of the trip to pay his COURIER nearly through 1900.

—Chas. A. Dugan and wife of Decatur were in town over night, guests at the Swineford. Charlie is an old Auburn boy and his many friends here will be glad to learn that he is among the most prosperous citizens of Decago.

—Esquire Walter tied the matrimonial knot yesterday for Sherman Rickett and Anna Bailey, both of St. Joe. It was the second marriage for each of the parties and "Judge" Walter did the tying in the most approved style.

—In the last twenty years, our imports of iron and steel have decreased in proportion to the increase of the exports. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, we exported manufactures of iron and steel valued at $93,715,951, while our imports of the same were reduced to $12,092,239.

—At the fifty-fourth annual session of the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God, held at Helmer this week, Elder I. W. Markley was returned to the Auburn charge for another year. Elder Markley is very popular with the members of his congregation, all of whom are pleased at his return.

—Mrs. W. B. Brown entertained in honor of Mrs. Lottie Cochran and her daughter Mary, at a 6-o'clock dinner last evening, the following ladies: Mrs. Cochran and daughter Mary, Mrs. F. T. Zimmerman, Mrs. Sallie Weamer and Mrs. Albert Weaver. Mr. Frank Zimmerman was the fortunate man to enjoy the evening with them.

—A car load of poultry was shipped from the Wabash station yesterday to the eastern market by a company of local buyers which includes Will and Eugene McDowell, Alva Baker and Neil Platter. The first shipment included a fine lot of turkeys, ducks, geese and chickens and the boys will be in the market for more of the same kind.

—The Roann Cooperage Mfg. Co, of Roann, Ind., has purchased the saw mill located at that place together with all the timber formerly owned by Ira F. Smith & Son. This mill will be operated in connection with the Cooperage stock factory and gives that concern a hardwood mill, two stave plants and a hoop factory combined. They also have a saw mill in connection with the hoop factory and operate it day and day and night.

—Today was the tenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. John Elson, and about seventy of their friends "dropped in," as they said, to remind them of it. Mr. and Mrs. Elson had not been apprised of the intended visit, and gracefully yielded possession of the house to their guests who came loaded with good "grub" of all kinds, backed up by a number of nice presents, suitable to the occasion. Those present say they had a good time, and we have no reason to doubt it.

Saturday's Daily.

—The state soldiers home at Lafayette now contains 631 inmates, and thirty more are waiting for room.

—Mrs. Sarah Rohrabaugh of Franklin sent over her subscription today by her son, who was here on business.

—County Superintendent Coe is kept busy these days visiting the country schools, all of which are progressing nicely.

—Kosciusko county farmers are getting even with each other in the courts for permitting Canada thistles to grow on their hands.

—J. W. Jackman of Grant was in town last evenifg in the interest of some school matters which he wished to put good shape.

—Cliff Walters hauled a load of wheat to the Lake Shore elevators yesterday which contained over 125 bushels. L. J. Miller says it was the biggest load of wheat he has ever received since he has been in the grain trade.

—William Holman, a well known resident of Butler township, was buried at Cedar chapel this forenoon. The funeral services was held at Butler Center and were largely attended. The deceased was the father of Corporal Philip Holman of Company K.

—Our old Waterloo neighbor, Ed. Blattner, was in town awhile Thursday. He is still on the road for a Toledo House and we hope doing well. His daughter Gertrude, has visited the relatives in Philadelphia since she was here this summer, but came home sick. She is better now.

—Late reports from the men injured in the sawmill explosion are most encouraging. They have had the best medical attention and good nursing and though all of them will always carry marks of the injuries received it is thought they will soon be able to resume their places as bread winners.

—There is a whole sermon in this short paragraph from an exchange: "If you gave your boy a pig or a calf and after he had cared for and reared it you sold it and pocketed the proceeds, don't join the church until you have squared things up with that boy. It will be hard work to keep him from playing with the cat's tail while you offer family prayers, if you do."

—Capt. David Andrews of Newville called yesterday on his way home from the reunion of the 44th, he being one of the many members of Co. F that was raised in that part of DeKalb county. He is not farming so much now, but attends to a few acres, has a fine house, everything handy, and is enjoying his life like a sensible man. One secret of his contentment is, he has read the COURIER from early days, and has it paid more than half through 1900.

—It is now believed that our dispute with Great Britian and Canada over the Alaskan boundary, will not be left with an arbitration commission. We feel pretty sure we are right, and don't want to leave the question to a commission that may ignore our rights in order to make a compromise as they evidently did in the Venezuelan boundary dispute. Ex-president Harrison still believes Venezuela was right on that question but that the commission saw fit to ignore her rights in order to give a half and half decision that would let both sides down easy.

—Auburn has the reputation of being one of the hustling towns of northeastern Indiana in all lines of business, and in one branch it has a hustler who is having about all he can attend to, and this is George Lanning, the fire insurance man. During the past few days he has written a number of policies for parties in Hamilton, St. Joe, Albion, Avilla and Auburn and other places and he says his books for the past two months show the largest business he has ever done in that length of time. The secret of his success is prompt attention to business and the advantage of long experience.

THE HANDLE FACTORY

The handle factory at the site of the old Ober stave plant, is starting up a lively business. The hum of machinery fills the rooms and men are handling the white pieces of ash at a lively rate. Today, when we were there, they were making the handles for long shovels and it is surprising how quickly they can make one. They have quite a stock of ash logs on the yard, and are now going to add basswood whenever it can be bought. All the slab and edge pieces that cannot be worked up, are cut up and sold for stove wood. The buildings have all been so changed, that one used to the old plant would not recognize it. Part are new, and all are put together so as to form one general building. The floors are of earth filled in about a foot deep which makes a good floor for their use, better than boards. They have good machinery and a 35 horse power Atlas engine.

An Owl in Court.

As cute a thing as we ever saw in court was what we saw today. When they adjourned at noon, the windows were left open, as the day was quite warm. On returning this afternoon the attorneys and all were surprised to see a fine little screech owl sitting on the top of the frame of a picture of the late Joseph Morlan, once our prosecuting attorney. The little fellow still sits there as we write. He does not look straight ahead, but keeps his eyes directly to the southward, so as to be looking directly at Judge Foby, who is making a plea. It is wonderfully funny how intently the little fellow seems to weigh each word spoken. Why he came into the room cannot be guessed. It so reminds one of Poe's Raven, that we cannot forbear paraphrasing a little:

Not the least obeisance made he
Not an instant stopped or staid he
But with mien of lord or lady
Perched above—"the jury door."
Perched and sat, and nothing more.

And that screech owl never flitting
Still is sitting, still is sitting,
On the picture of Joe Morlan
Just above the jury door
Sits and looks and nothing more.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the most severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the only remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup.' It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try one bottle, many years by all druggists in the world. Sample bottles at O. P. RABER'S, Corunna.

A Runaway.

There was a good start for a lively runaway at the Lake Shore freight depot this forenoon. Warren George was delivering a load of oats to Mr. Miller and the team was on the bridge where they unload, when the board used for a seat slipped off and onto the horses, and they started on a jump down the bridge. Mr. George reached for the lines, but they had dropped. Quick as a flash he jumped off forward, sprung for the team and succeeded in stopping them just as they reached the group of buildings to the south. Not a thing was hurt, but Mr. George's activity and coolness saved what might have been a bad runaway. Mr. Miller says he has not seen a runaway from the elevator in all the years he has bought grain, till this one.

More Free Delivery.

We see by the Laporte Argus that a free delivery route is being established at that point. It says:

Postmaster Banks and Ed. Etherington went over the proposed country free mail delivery route Saturday by way of Springfield, Shippeburg and Heston. They found 213 families on the line and about 2,000 people, and did not go more than half a mile from the road. The people are unanimously in favor of the project and there is no reasonable doubt that it will be tried. Mr. Etherington has been taking an active interest in the matter and is deserving of credit for his work.

Their Flags.

The two South African republics which will be united to meet Great Britain in the coming war have the following flags:

TRANSNALL.

One-fouth of the length of the flag, extending along the staff from top to bottom, is green. The rest of the flag is in three stripes; the upper is blue; the middle, white; the lower one, red.

ORANGE FREE STATE.

Its flag is peculiar. It has seven stripes, but they are not uniform. In the upper corner next the staff are three short stripes extending one third the flag, the upper being red, the middle white, and the third, blue. The rest of flag is alternate white and orange, four white and three orange. Anyone who cares to do so, can easily make one of these flags and so get an exact idea as to their appearance.

Struck a Snag.

The monkey and the tiger
With the jumping kangaroo,
Resolved to form a syndicate
And run a mighty zoo.
The ostrich kicked about the plan,
The lion made a fuss;
The snake then hissed, and tried to kiss
The old rhinocerous.
This made a great commotion,
The camel chewed the rag,
The elephant blew his trumpet,
And the syndicate struck a snag.

Postoffice Changes Clerks.

Miss Lydia Hallam has resigned her position in the postoffice, and will conclude her service there this week. She has made herself popular with the patrons of the office, by her pleasant ways and all will wish her well. Her place is taken by Miss Etta Gilliland, who is also well and favorably known having been sometime connected with the Dispatch force. We believe she will be an efficient assistant for Postmaster Forkner.

"Every Advertiser Lies."

Is the general impression among people who do not read. Fortunately there are very few people who have eyes and do not read. The more one reads, the more one knows, and the more one learns. Now, if we failed to put this advertisement where you may read it, we would be doing you an injustice, for likely as not, you are this moment suffering, and you don't know what is the matter with you. After you have read this advertisement, go and spend 10 cents for a trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It costs ten cents a line to tell you any more about this, so we will not enlarge on this subject. Try us in this. You can get it of Davenport the Druggist.

Consumption

is robbed of its terrors by the fact that the best medical authorities state that it is a curable disease; and one of the happy things about it is, that its victims rarely ever lose hope.

You know there are all sorts of secret nostrums advertised to cure consumption. Some make absurd claims. We only say that if taken in time and the laws of health are properly observed, will heal the inflammation of the throat and lungs and nourish and strengthen the body so that it can throw off the disease.

We have thousands of testimonials where people claim they have been permanently cured of this malady.

A PLAIN TALE.

If the men of the state plant a saloon upon every street-corner to lure our children to destruction, are we to be counted unwomanly that we desire to have a hand in outlawing that hideous traffic which is alive at the behest of Satan that he may make of the innocent children that to-day play about our doors, the murderers, the thieves, the lunatics, and the suicides of tomorrow?

And yet we are told in a strait like this, "Oh, go back. Take your needle and do fancy work—the needle is the peculiar insignia of a woman's true sphere. Don't think: leave that for the sterner sex. Make your home so beautiful that your boys will stay there in perference to any other place, and don't, above all things, try to dabble in the filthy pool of politics."

Now that sounds nice. Satan was always plausible. Then while you are embroidering and painting your china and making wall banners and screens and flattering yourself that you are sweet and womanly, Satan steps around the corner there and he builds a palace, and fills it with superb hangings and glittering mirrors and splendid sensual figures, and brilliant lights, and into flashing crystal he pours the seductive beverage that steals away the brain and the principle, and fits his victim for deeds of shame and pollution.

It is all right to make your home as beautiful as you can, but it is right too to think and work for the coming of the Lord: to use your influence to raise the standard of purity in this nation, and to set your face against the feeling which prompts the enduring of this awful trade in souls. This oughtest thou to do and not to leave the other undone.

You cannot always hold your child in your arms—always keep him within the walls of home, however beautiful it may be. Some day, before long, he will walk down street there, and he will take in all the sights. He will notice that the men who have called at his home are entering a splendid room there on the corner—honorable men whom you greet in passing.

His father says, "Stand here a minute, sonnie, till I come out," and the child sees through the door as it opens and shuts how beautiful it looks in there, and he hears the click of glasses and the laugh and the jest, and when his father comes out and leads him away, he answers his questions by, "Oh, you are not old enough to go in there," and that makes the child curious, and when he is older he goes in, and he finds out all about it, and he thinks home is dull. And if, after awhile, you get frightened and tell your boy that the saloon is the open door of hell, he doubts you, and before know it, O God! your boy is gone. And you have been so womanly all the time and have not lifted a finger to oppose it. Bah! I sicken of such womanliness as that.—MRS. M. H. BOARDMAN.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D. Williams, of Manchester, Mich., tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by H. B. McCord the Druggist.

L. C. Loveland Death.

We see by the St. Joe News that Lucius C. Loveland is dead. He had been a prominent citizen of the southeast part of the county for many years, had been a justice for sometime, and once or twice a promiment candidate for county recorder. He was also a prominent church member. He had gone to bed Friday night as well as usual but near morning awoke with a pain in his chest, and in a few moments was dead He leaves a wife and children.

A LIMA MAN'S STORY.

I have received excellent results from the use of Foley's Kidney Cure. It relieved my back-ache and severe pain over the hips. It toned up my system and gave me new vim and energy. I regard it as an honest, reliable remedy for all Kidney diseases. It makes no false claims but does what it says when given a fair trial. I certainly recommend it.—WM FINN, 447 Elida Road, Lima, Ohio.

CHAPTER XI.

The pleasant days and mild evenings of the past week have been unusually favorable to full attendance and fine interchange of thought.

The "Jiner" led out at the last session and gave as his opinion that what the world needed more than aught else, was more secret societies. He himself belonged to several, but would be glad to attach his name to the master roll of several more if they were constituted as he thought they should be. He explained that secret societies were of five sorts.

1. They were purely fraternal, but had their origin in some common interest or union of interest, as in the case of the origin of Masons.

2. They might originate in a common danger passed through, as the G. A. R.

3. They might have their origin in a principle exemplified by some noble deed like that of Damon and Pythias, or those of the famous Maccabee brothers.

4. They might have their origin for purely insurance purposes, as in case of many of the new ones now being pushed.

5. They might be mere matters of ancestral pride, as the Daughters of the Revolution.

He said that more societies could easily be originated under any of these divisions. For instance, the Masons, theoretically at least, had at some period actually worked at that trade. This starts us with the first division. So I am going to originate a new order of all who have made sorghum molasses. Our lodge shall be called a "Field," the chief officer shall sit in the northwest corner of the Field and shall be known as "Right Worthy Chief Planter." At his right will be placed, the "Right Worthy Hoer," at the left, the "Right Worthy Plower." In the opposite corner will be the Worshipful Cutter and Stripper, and near him will be the High and Mighty Crusher and Squeezer on one side, and on the other the Grand High Purifier and Cleanser. The retiring officers will be the Past W. C. P., etc. No person shall be eligible to membership unless there is a sticky feeling on his fingers. He must raise a crop of sorghum each year or be subjected to a fine, and after three such fines shall be expelled, unless the seasons have been such as to render the making of a crop impossible.

Here, the House began to object, and criticise, and finally told him flatly, that his whole scheme was commonplace and silly.

"Suppose it is" retorted the Jiner. "Is not the raising and making of sorghum just as interesting and honorable as mixing sand and lime with water and plastering it between the stones? Any honest labor is dignified and worthy, one no more so than the other."

But the Pioneer was not convinced. "Why" said he, "I can start a society of this sort on any similar origin, but one I think more worthy. For example, we might found it on the basis, that all members must at some time eaten with a wooden spoon. And here is a story to start with:

In the early days of DeKalb county one of the families whose name is now very familiar, had to live a good deal of the time on mush and milk. This was all right, but as they had only one spoon in a big family, it made flush times for that spoon. But the family got along very well, and grew in strength and grace, some being residents of the county today. It was awkward, however, when a family of strangers came along, as often was the case, hungry and tired, and asked to be lodged and fed. One dark stormy evening, it is told, Uncle Sammy Wasson was piloting some new comers through the woods, when darkness overtook them, and they were glad to seek the hospitable roof that covered the one wooden spoon. Could they have shelter and food? "Yes, surely, and plenty of it such as we have." But the generous hosts had only corn meal and milk. An abundance of this was made ready, and business was about ready to begin, when to the dismay of all, the one wooden spoon could not be found. It was lost. Some careless member of the household had thrown it out with the dishwater. Here was a fix, for the night was dark. But something must be done as they could not use chopsticks like a Chinaman, and it would not even be backwoods etiquette to eat mush and milk with the fingers Uncle Sammy came to the rescue. He believed he could find that spoon. So, out into the darkness he rushed. He knew about where the slops were thrown or ought to be and he fumbled and poked about for several minutes. Then, the murky air was split wide open with one of Uncle Sammy's familiar yells. He had found the spoon. Seven hungry mouths were waiting to welcome its return. And with a delicacy of feeling known only to printers, we draw the curtain and leave them to enjoy a pioneer meal.

Chicago Parade Notes.

A good many laughable things occurred at the great parade in Chicago on Monday. As already noted all sorts of boxes, kegs, barrels, step ladders, stone ledges or bases, windows, etc, were used so as to get a look over the heads in front.

We saw one gallant man holding to keep them steady, two bicycles, on the seats of which were two ladies, who thus had a grand view, though of course the man saw nothing. He seemed happy, however and had his hands full to keep the wheels at the proper angle to secure steadiness.

Two gentlemen near us stood on top of a big apple barrel for which they had paid a boy fifty cents. After standing the strain about an hour, one of them on shifting his tired foot, punched in a part of the head. His partner saved him from falling, and after that each kept one foot on the chine or end of the staves. It was not comfortable, but they saw the parade. The funniest thing though, occurred to two half grown girls, who were standing on a cheaply made barrel. All at once the head gave way and in they went, wedged together in the barrel like sardines. Some men tipped the barrel enough to shake them out by having some friends pull at them.

A good many people sat in high windows, and many boys and men were on top of high buildings; of these many had paper trumpets or "megaphones" through which they shouted all sorts of remarks.

When Chief Kipley came riding at the head of the parade, they yelled "Old Kipley you're the stuff, you're all right," etc. As Senator Mason came by, some one tooted, "Billy Mason! Here goes our own Bill, hip, hip, hurrah!" and "Billy" who seems the embodiment of good nature, laughed heartily. They did the same thing by Gen. Merritt and the stern old warrior unbent from his dignity and laughed, and swung his hat like a school boy.

Of course President McKinley is used to this sort of thing, though his high position relieved him of any of it. But the crowd was so enthusiastic over Sir Wilfred Laurier that one expected every minute that some Canadian or even American would say some undignified thing. But for once the crowd was respectfull and Sir Wilfred as well as the Mexican and Japanese officials were greeted with respectful heartiness that must have been gratifying.

Court Proceedings.

Curtis North gave $200 bond to appear at court on charge of intoxication. D. M. Link is his attorney.

Prosecutor has dismissed the two cases against Devinney for violating the liquor law.

James McDonald on charge of burglary goes free. No proof.

John Humphrey gets $20 and frills on a plea of guilty of keeping a gaming house, and he will stay in jail till it is paid.

Frank Cody and Ed. Hamilton were called up to-day and flushed off. It will be remembered that in August four men had trouble in a box car on the Lake Shore road, they were stealing a ride. They overpowered and robbed one of them named Stone and got $15 and threw him out of the car. The two men held here, gave the above names, plead guilty and were given two to fourteen years in the prison south, as they are under thirty years old. Also a fine of $15 each and not vote for three years.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement, that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking six bottles, found herself sound and well; now does her own housework, and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Only 50 cents and $1.00, every bottle guaranteed.

Killed in a Wreck

Mr. and Mrs. Warrick received a phone message this forenoon from Edgerton, Williams Co. saying her brother, Irving A. Poole, had been killed in a railroad wreck, but gave no particulars. He was a fireman about 38 years old and leaves a wife and two children. He will be brought to Edgerton, and the funeral will be Saturday. His home was at Tecumseh, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Warrick will go to Edgerton to-morrow.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

News of Crimes and Criminals, Accidents, Fires, Etc., from North, South, East and West, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

War Declared.

A dispatch from Johannesburg says: War was declared Thursday. The formal declaration occurred at 10 o'clock Friday morning.

A dispatch from Durban announces that the Boers seized Albertina Station and demanded the keys, which were delivered to them by the station-master, who reached Ladysmith on a trolley car. The excitement at Ladysmith is increasing, and the troops are ready to act at a moment's notice.

The Jacobsdal commando of the Free State Boers is marching on the Modder River.

There is no abatement in the anti-English feeling on the continent. The Times Berlin correspondent declares that the German nation as a whole is unfriendly to England, and that there would be rejoicing on all sides if England should suffer disaster or damage, just as the people were ready to rejoice had America suffered defeat at the hands of Spain.

Funston Is Home.

The United States transport Tartar has arrived at San Francisco from Manila, with the Twentieth Kansas Regiment under the command of Col. Metcalf, and 300 discharged soldiers from various regiments. The Tartar was met at Angel Island by Gov. Stanley of Kansas, and party, who went out in a tug to meet her.

Brigadier General Funston was the passenger most eagerly sought for. When asked as to his future plans he replied: "That depends considerably on what the authorities wish me to do." He reported a very pleasant trip and said that he was in excellent health. He had little to say about conditions in the Phillippines beyond expressing the opinion that the war would soon be ended. He spoke in high terms of the good work done by the men in his command. He was glad to get back to the United States, though he did not regret the time and energy expended in an attempt to subdue the Filipinos, which he was confident would ultimately prove successful. Gen. Funston was accompanied by his wife.

A Big Fight Expected.

The War Department has received the following dispatch from Gen. Otis:

"Schwan's column is moving on Sapang and Das Marinas, where opposition is expected; his artillery and wagon transportation are returning to Bacoor by way of Rosario. A column of 500 men is marching from Imus to support Schwan if necessary. Young, in the north, has occupied Arayat, and supplies are being moved up the Rio Grande by cascoes to that point. Lawton will command column when full concentration is effected. Young's loss, one enlisted man. Insurgents attacked Angeles line; quickly repulsed; six enlisted men slightly wounded.

Reynolds., Ind., Bank Looted.

The Reynolds Bank at Reynolds, a village of 800 people, a few miles from Monticello, Ind., was looted by robbers about 3 o'clock Thursday morning. The safe was blown open with dynamite and from $3,000 to $10,000 secured. The explosion demolished the frame building in which the bank was located. People first on the scene saw two robbers fleeing in a buggy. The Sheriff and four deputies began tracking the robbers with bloodhounds. The thieves fled toward Lafayette.

Blown to Atoms.

The explosion at the Aetna Powder Works at Miller's Station, near Valparaiso, Ind., was more disastrous than at first reported. Four men were blown to atoms. Not a piece of their remains larger than a man's hand was found. The dead are: John Joyce, William Seeberger, John Hoffman and John Gallagher. The victims were all single. Eighteen thousand pounds of nitroglycerine went up in the tank house. Every window light at Miller's Station was broken and many at Chestertown.

Will Act for Britain.

London special: The Foreign Office confirms the report from Washington that Great Britain has asked the United States Government to empower United States consular authorities in the Transvaal to represent British interests there during hostilities.

Two Tramps Killed.

A serious wreck occurred on the Reading Railroad near Williamsport, Pa. Eighteen cars were smashed and two tramps were killed.

Marsh Fires Burning.

Marsh fires are causing heavy losses in Northern Indiana counties, and an immense area has been burned over in the Kankakee region. Corn fields have been devastated and immense quantities of hay have been consumed. There has been no rain for a number of days and no check can be given the progress of the flames. The loss has not been estimated.

Asphyxiated by Gas.

Thomas Morgan and Louis Cameron were asphyxiated at their boarding house in New York by gas from a jet.

To Improve Duquesne Plant.

The Carnegie Steel Company will immediately begin the construction of improvements at its plant at Duquesne, Pa., to cost from $7,500,000 to $8,000,000, indicating that the company's officials think the existing prosperity in the iron and steel trade will continue.

Caramel Factory Destroyed.

Fire started on the fifth floor of the six-story brick building at 18 Desbrosses street, New York, and soon the whole building was ablaze. The fire destroyed the Dexter-Frane caramel factory on the fifth floor, then worked up into hundreds of bags of cork on the sixth floor.

FARMERS CORNER BROOM CORN.

They Do Not Propose to Let Brokers Make All the Profit.

It appears that Illinois farmers are about to corner the broom corn market. Last year the brokers got hold of all the brush in sight and, storing it in warehouses, spent the winter in meeting once a month and, while they ate and drank the best to be had, marked up the price a few cents on the pound. The bulk of last year's crop was bought for $50 a ton and before the new supply came in it had been marked up to $180 and had been practically "cleaned out" at a figure near this fabulous price. When the new crop was put on the market a few weeks ago it started off at $60 and finally got up to $68 for prime brush. About ten days ago foreign buyers began to come into the district and the farmer with broom corn to sell at once became a man of importance. He raised the price and from $70 to went to $80 in twenty-four hours. Then the buyers took everything they could get, regardless of quality, at $80. Then they offered $90, and finally $100. There is no shortage to speak of this season, but the clean-up of last year's crop makes broom corn a scarce article in all quarters.

BOSTON CLUB HOUSE RAIDED.

Suicide of a Gambler Causes Police to Arrest Wealthy Men.

The Bedford Club was raided by the Boston police early Sunday morning and thirty members arrested charged with gambling. A wagon load of paraphernalia and $4,000 in poker chips were taken to the station. At the station the prisoners, among whom were twenty-seven of the most prominent and wealthy business men of the city, furnished cash bail, and superhuman efforts were made to suppress the story. The raid is a climax to the "wide open" manner in which gambling has been conducted at the club. Only a few nights ago a well-known citizen, once wealthy, lost $7,000 at the club, the last of his fortune, and then committed suicide.

PRICES TEND UPWARD.

Trade East and West Still Reported Good by Bradstreet.

Bradstreet's weekly review says that distributive trade, while smaller at some markets, is still of encouraging volume, industry is active, railway earnings heavy, prices still tend upward and bank clearings increase, while failures lessen. Fall festivals and other celebrations at several cities have exercised an appreciable effect upon retail trade and proved a stimulating factor in wholesale lines. In industrial affairs activity is widespread and strikes are fewer and less costly than in most years. Business failures are apparently at a minimum and liabilities are certainly less costly than for many years past. Prices as a whole manifest aggressive strength.

TRUSTS HARD HIT IN INDIANA.

Action of Glassworkers Is Upheld by Judge Ryan at Anderson.

The window glass trust received a hard blow when Judge Ryan of the Superior Court at Anderson, Ind., held that the complaints filed a few weeks ago asking for an injunction to prevent the window glass companies in the county from joining the trust are good and sufficient for cause of action.

AGAINST TAX REPEAL.

Mississippi Valley Physicians Table Resolution.

The members of the Mississippi Valley Medical Association, in session at Chicago, tabled a resolution praying for the repeal of the internal revenue tax on drugs, medicines and surgical appliances.

Lay a Corner Stone.

The largest throng of people assembled in the downtown district of Chicago since 1892 gathered Monday, the twenty-eighth anniversary of the great fire, to lay the corner stone of the Government building and honor the representatives of three sovereignties.

Shower of Hoppers.

A shower of grasshoppers visited New Albany, Ind., covering to a depth of two inches a space of about three acres. They came in such a cloud that the citizens thought that a hard storm was approaching.

Supplies for Manila.

The British steamer Afridi sailed from New York Thursday for Manila with 313 pontoon wagons, each seventy feet wide, consigned to Capt. Seibert of the engineer corps, and 1,000 tons of engineers' and commissary supplies.

Spain's Flag Cannot Fly.

The Mayor of Havana, Perfecto Lacoste, issued an order directing that no Spanish flag be displayed in the city of Havana, except at the Spanish consulate. The order is causing much bitter feeling among the Spaniards.

Military Departments Merge.

The Secretary of War has issued an order discontinuing the military department of the gulf and merging it into the department of the east, under command of Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, headquarters at New York.

BOER WAR IS BEGUN.

BURGHERS CROSS FRONTIER AND SEIZE A TRAIN.

This Is Declared to Be the Outbreak of Hostilities—Diplomatic Relations Between the Two Governments Broken Off—Telegraph Lines Cut.

The Boer war in South Africa has begun. According to information from Pretoria by way of London Wednesday the understanding that a state of war already existed was given official confirmation by a proclamation issued by Sir Alfred Milner. The proclamation declares that all persons aiding or abetting the enemy will be guilty of high treason.

The limited cable service between London and South African ports was so congested with official dispatches Wednesday night that little news matter could be handled. While no word had been received up to a late hour Thursday morning that actual fighting had begun in the Transvaal, it was taken for granted that war had begun. It was known that Conyngham Greene, the British agent, had left Pretoria. The first act of war was reported in a dispatch to the London Telegraph. It told of the Boers having seized railroad property belonging to the English colony. The British patrol was stoned by the burghers between Ladysmith and the Orange Free State border.

Intense excitement prevailed in Cape Town Wednesday as a result of the Boers' move, which seemed to make war certain. Orange Free State burghers were reported to have already entered Natal, crossing the frontier thirty-seven miles below Newcastle, which the Boers, advancing from the north and west, were expected to occupy. Transvaal troops of the commanders north of the Buffalo river were reported on the move. The British first-class cruiser Powerful, Captain Lambton, arrived at Cape Town, having 500 infantry on board. Many of the Cape Dutch left to join the Boers.

England's reply to the Boers' ultimatum was short and dignified, merely acknowledging the receipt of the Transvaal's note. It was delivered at Pretoria Wednesday. All London seemed to be carried away by the war spirit. Patriotic airs at the theaters caused the wildest enthusiasm. Soldiers on the streets were cheered as heroes. The staid members of the Stock Exchange unfurled the union jack and the royal standard, and sang national airs like a crowd of schoolboys. Several London papers printed New York and Washington dispatches to the effect that America's sympathies are with England, and also the statement that English subjects in the Transvaal are to be looked after by American consuls.

HANDING OUT AMMUNITION TO THE BOERS.

It was reported in London Wednesday that a body of Orange Free State Boers had crossed the Natal border at Cundy Leugh Pass. This is one of the less important passes over the Drakensberg and lies twenty-seven miles west of Glencoe and about thirty southwest of Newcastle. Also that a party of Orange Free State Boers had been detected by cabineer scouts in Natal territory, near Berg. Seeing that they had been observed they immediately retreated. Commandant Ben Viljoen, in command of the Orange Free State artillery, began a march to Albertina, the first railway station beyond Van Reenens' Pass, in the Orange Free State.

ARMY MULES KILLED.

Animals Mangled to Death on Transport Siam During Typhoon.

The United States transport Siam, which left San Francisco Sept. 9 with upward of 330 valuable mules, the coming of which had been anxiously awaited at Manila, as mules are in great demand for continuing the campaign, arrived Friday morning and reported that all but nineteen of the animals had been lost in two severe typhoons under peculiarly distressing conditions. The Siam, which left Honolulu thirty-one days previous, encountered the typhoons early last week. One lasted forty hours. Most of the forage, which was on deck, was swept overboard, all the boats were smashed and the steamer rolled tremendously in the trough of the sea, although the officers made every effort to bring her about. The mules were hurled from side to side and frightfully mangled. Their legs and necks were broken and the wretched animals fell in such a confused mass that the attendants were unable to relieve them. In the meantime the deck load was washed off, the ship lightened and the rolling increased. When the storm abated the injured animals were killed and their carcasses thrown overboard. When the Siam arrived her propeller was high out of the water and the wrecks of her boats were hanging from the davits.

The loss of the animals will be greatly felt by Gen. Otis, who needed them for transportation of supplies to the cities and towns held by the American troops. Gen. Otis recently cabled the War Department that the animals shipped would be sufficient to meet all requirements until the animal transports could return to San Francisco for more, so that it was unnecessary to charter more freight vessels. It will now be necessary to procure another ship to leave as soon as possible with more mules.

BLOWN TO ATOMS

Were Hundreds of Spaniards During the Cuban War.

Gen. Maximilian Jantsche, an Austrian, who served in the Cuban army under Gen. Gomez, tells some remarkable stories of the work of dynamiters in the Cuban army and the terrible execution done by them. Gen. Jantsche made a study of explosives before he went to Cuba. Gen. Gomez gave him instructions to destroy as many Spaniards and as much property as possible by the use of explosives. At one place a troop train was dynamited. There were not less than 300 men aboard.

M'KINLEY'S TRIP WEST.

Presidential Party Visits Many States and Travels Over 5,000 Miles.

President McKinley's visit to Chicago was a halt in his swing around the circle, which began at Washington on Oct. 4 and which ends there with his return on Oct. 19. The itinerary of this trip has taken him over several loops and through many States, and was arranged for many stops. The train left Chicago Wednesday night. The first stop was at Terre Haute, Ind., then down to Evansville. He returned to Chicago Thursday night at 8:20 o'clock. Every halt was scheduled and timed from there to Savannah, Ill., and thence to St. Paul, to West Superior, Duluth and Fargo. From the last named city he returned to Minnesota, then back into Dakota and to Sioux City, Iowa. The train crossed Iowa, making seventeen stops. Galena, Ill., was visited on Oct. 16, and the train then went whizzing into Wisconsin. Stops were made at Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha and Waukegan, and on Oct. 17 the President was in Chicago once more, passing on to Kalamazoo, Mich. A stop was made at Jackson the same evening, and the next stop was at Toledo, Ohio, at night. At Cleveland he stopped twelve hours. His other Ohio stops were at Warren, Niles and Youngstown. He was to reach Pittsburg at 12:35 a. m. on Oct. 19 and eleven hours later he would be back in the depot of the Pennsylvania road at Washington. He will have traveled 5,009 miles before finishing the trip.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S TRIP, 5,009 MILES LONG.

Ten thousand veterans of the blue and gray and visitors were crowded about the railroad station at Evansville in spite of a heavy rain, to welcome the President and his party upon their arrival from Chicago. The Presidential salute was fired, whistles were sounded and all the bells in the city rung. The President was driven at once to the Tri-State fair grounds, escorted by the Cleveland Grays. At the ceremonies there Mayor Akin presided. Gov. Mount, for the State of Indiana, and C. A. De Bruler, for the city, made addresses of welcome, after which the President spoke.

Army and Navy Notes.

Naval officers prefer Chinese and Japanese as servants.

The marine hospital service employs about 250 physicians.

Improvements are to be made in the Government's powder factory at Indian Head.

Scarcity of steel is delaying completion of the new torpedo boats.

In Cassier's Magazine for October Admiral Melville argues for triple screws in warships.

Congress neglected to make provision for the office of chaplain in the new volunteer regiments.

A second lieutenant of United States marines must spend more than one-third of his first year's salary for uniforms.

The British army is about to lose one of its most popular figures by retirement—under the age clause—of the chaplain general, Dr. Edghill. He succeeded in that office the late Bishop Piers Claughton in 1895.

GENERAL ADVANCE BEGUN.

Troops of Lawton and MacArthur Are Pushing Northward.

A special from Washington says that a general advance along the American lines in Luzon has been begun, and War Department officials expect reports of some heavy fighting soon. Official dispatches received and not made public show that both Gen. Lawton and Gen. MacArthur are moving northward with their forces, the purpose being to get control of the railroad and the important towns as far north as possible. Eventually it is intended to send an expedition by water to Lingayen, near the northern terminus of the railway, so as to flank the enemy. This expedition, however, will not start until additional troops have arrived. Meanwhile the divisions under both Lawton and MacArthur will push to the north as far as they can.

According to statements made at the War Department this advance is to be made permanent. There are to be no more towns taken and then abandoned. With the additional troops which have arrived during the rainy season, and others to follow, Gen. Corbin says there will be a sufficient number of troops available to garrison towns as fast as they are taken, and still leave a formidable force for continuing the onward movement.

Gen. Schwan's column occupied San Francisco de Malabon Tuesday without encountering any opposition. In the advance from Rosario, the Americans met with small bodies of insurgents, who, however, quickly fell back. The activity of the rebels on the south seems to have received a quietus in the sharp fighting about Novaleta. The natives about Manila made an attack near La Loma Church and on the railroad and telegraph lines.

TO SUPPLANT OUR PORK.

Powerful Foreign Company to Compete with American Exporters.

A powerful company composed of French, German and Russian capitalists, with a capital of over $50,000,000, has been formed for the purpose of competing with the American pork exporters in Europe, particularly in England, Germany and Scandinavia.

The plan is to raise hogs on a large scale in Siberia. It is claimed that this can be done cheaper than in the United States. The hogs will be shipped alive over the Siberian Railroad to the northwestern frontiers of Russia, where immense slaughter houses, on the American plan, will be established. Thence the pork will be sent by water to English ports and by rail to Germany and Scandinavia. In spite of the enormous distance, it is asserted that such Siberian pork can be brought to Europe cheaper than American pork. This, it is pointed out, is due to the low cost of production in Siberia and the cheapness of transportation on the railroads.

ENORMOUS RAILWAY EARNINGS.

Receipts on Many Roads Exceed All Expectations.

The budget of railway earnings which was announced in Wall street, New York, Wednesday, tells of enormous railway receipts. The expenditures which have been made upon the important systems have caused substantial reductions in operating expenses, which are reflected in all of the recent reports. One of the most astonishing statements was that of the Southern Pacific Company. During the month of August its gross earnings increased $894,055 and its net earnings increased $423,453. For two months ending Aug. 31 the gross increased $1,583,796 and net increased $670,263. Rock Island increased for August, gross $172,609, and net $115,055.

CHINESE MUST STAY OUT.

Celestials at Portal, N. D., Are Refused Admission.

The Treasury Department decided to refuse admission to thirty-three Chinamen at Portal, N. D., who claim to be residents of Chicago and entitled to admission. An investigation developed the fact that there is in Chicago an understanding among certain Chinese firms that for a consideration, usually $200 or $300, they will certify that incoming Chinamen are members of the firm who have left the country to purchase goods in China. These firms have the papers prepared and supply the witnesses.

BUSINESS SITUATION.

Chicago Correspondence:

Bank clearings are one of the most reliable indices to the general situation, and it is an easy matter to judge from them of the degree of prosperity that has prevailed during any given period. The returns for Chicago for the first nine months of the current year are larger than the entire 1897 total and only slightly below the total for the twelve months of 1898. Chicago clearings for 1899 will exceed those for 1898 by more than $1,000,000,000. What is true of Chicago is true of the country at large. The aggregate clearings of the country for the month of September exceeded $7,000,000,000, being ahead of those for August and nearly equal to those for July. The far western cities show the largest percentage of gain and the southwestern ones the smallest, but even the latter show an improvement of 10 per cent as compared with last year.

Reports from all over the country tell of an increasing volume of trade, and manufacturers, jobbers and merchants are abnormally busy. The scarcity of supplies is the prominent feature, and buyers complain of inability to get all their wants satisfied. There has seldom been a time when goods have been so well sold up.

So far as the speculative situation is concerned, there has been very little change this week. Money continues to be the governing factor in the stock markets, and so long as rates remain at their present level it is idle to look for any material improvement in security values. Trading in grain has not been marked by any striking features. Compared with the closing prices of a week ago values were 1 cent a bushel lower for wheat and a trifle higher for corn. Business was fairly good and the crops of the season having all matured changes in prices from day to day were not, as during the growing season, affected by fluctuating prospects of the yield. An estimate made by Statistician Snow that the total winter and spring wheat crop was 564,000,000 bushels had much to do with creating a change in speculative sentiment, which resulted in a loss in price of 1 cent a bushel.

Talk of tight money had also predisposed speculators in wheat to doubt the possibility of an advance in prices. Another contributory cause of the heaviness that characterized the market toward the end of the week was the growing conviction that war in the Transvaal, should it occur, would not tend to the enhancement of the price in this country whatever might be the effect upon British markets of a consequent rise in ocean freights.

Corn prices were upheld because of the great activity of the shipping demand, and the prevailing impression that the accumulations from previous crops have been practically all used up, so that this year's production has alone to be depended on to fill the extraordinary consumption caused by the barren pastures at home and the heaviest foreign demand ever experienced, owing to a like effect of a hot, dry summer in Europe.

THIRD ATTEMPT A FLUKE.

Yacht Race Fails Saturday Because of Lack of Wind.

The third fluke of the Columbia and Shamrock Saturday disgusted those interested in yachting. It was a little too much for public patience to bear. This was shown in the fact that the attendance on the excursion boats going down to the course decreased from 50,000 on Tuesday to less than 20,000 Saturday. Boat rates were $1 on Tuesday; they were $1 Saturday. The wind for the third time failed the yachts. When they came down to the starting line, the Columbia in fine position and taking the lead, a stiff gale was blowing. In less than an hour this diminished to four knots, and by mid-afternoon it was almost a dead calm. The yachts rounded the stake boat, which was more than they did Thursday, and the Columbia cut down a long lead of the Shamrock and took the front, but it was not real racing. It was drifting. Some years ago the international race was seventeen days in progress before either challenger or defender scored a victory.

As a rule the steamboat captains gave the yachts a wider range than on the previous days, and even the White Lady promptly got out of range of the patrol boats when signaled to by the revenue officer aboard a tug. There was perhaps more discussion on the excursion boats as to whether the course could be covered within the time limit than there was about the merits of the two yachts, and bets were made on this score.

An hour before the limit the situation became exciting, and the racers shot through the waves at a lively clip, but as they got under the lee of the highlands and slackened their gait it became evident that the boats could not make it in time, and the odds changed heavily in favor of "no race," with no takers on the other side. Two of the most interesting sights in the race were the former cup defenders, the America and the Vigilant. The former did not follow the run, but cruised around and was just outside the Hook, and was within range of the returning fleet, receiving many complimentary remarks from yachting experts.

From the bridge of the revenue cutter Manning, Captain Robley D. Evans directed the movement of the fleet guarding the course of the races, and when the day was done he was obliged to report only one steamer, the Block Island, for infraction of the rules.

SERVANT GIRL FAMINE.

Condition that Continues to Bother the Housewives of Chicago.

The "servant girl famine" still continues to bother Chicago. There are five situations open for every girl who cares to take up the work. The girls are not there, however. There has been talk of an exodus of domestic servants from other towns to that place, but if such has taken place the pilgrims must have been lost on the way. The supply of servants has not increased. The employment agencies are full of waiting women, but they are mistresses, not maids. They wait for the servant who does not come. In the meantime, men continue to apply for and get women's work. There are now scores of men acting as cooks and "second girls" in private families. They do the washing and perform other work usually performed by women. Girls in domestic employment now receive from 50 cents to $1.50 more per week than they did before the famine.

INCREASE OF POSTOFFICES.

Number Is Now About 1,600 Greater than on June 30, 1898.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow's report will contain all the facts relating to 75,000 postoffices in the country up to June 30, the close of the fiscal year. This is an increase of 1,330 postoffices over the corresponding period of 1898. Since June 30 about 300 new offices have been established, and since the close of the civil war the postoffices throughout the country have increased at the rate of over 1,000 a year.

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Starke County Preacher Predicts the World's End Soon—Natural Gas Supply at Peru Deficient—Woman Fears Husband Was Embalmed Alive.

The Rev. Dr. J. T. Boyd, a Starke County preacher, predicts that the world will come to an end soon, and, to be more specific, he has fixed upon Nov. 11, 1899, as the date for the earth's dissolution. He bases his prophecy upon science and Biblical facts. The Rev. Mr. Boyd says that the earth passes through a stream of meteors in different places every thirty-three years, and that on the date above mentioned the world will come into contact with the solid bodies that form the head of this meteoric stream, and thus cause the extinction of the human race.

Gas Shortage at Peru.

The Peru branch of the Dietrich natural gas syndicate announced that gas will be turned off at all factories, public buildings, gas engines and other places where much gas is used. It is claimed the pressure is so low that gas cannot be supplied without pumping, and the company will not put in a station unless the city will compromise its suit for a one-third reduction of rates which is now pending in the United States Supreme Court. Oil drillers and pumpers will be greatly affected by the cutting off of their engines.

Sensation at Summitville.

Summitville is excited over the announcement of Mrs. Edward Hunter that her husband was embalmed before he was dead. She said that after the undertaker left, she held a mirror to his nostrils, and the surface was soon covered with moisture. She became prostrated. The doctor and undertaker say the man was dead.

OUTBOUND.

A lonely sail in the vast sea-room,
I have put out for the port of gloom.

The voyage is far on the trackless tide,
The watch is long, and the seas are wide.

The headlands blue in the sinking day
Kiss me a hand on the outward way.

The fading gulls, as they dip and veer,
Lift me a voice that is good to hear.

The great winds come, and the heaving sea,
The restless mother, is calling me.

The cry of her heart is lone and wild,
Searching the night for her wandered child.

Beautiful, weariless mother of mine,
In the drift of doom I am here, I am thine.

Beyond the fathom of hope or fear,
From bourn to bourn of the dusk I steer.

Swept on in the wake of the stars, in the stream
Of a roving tide, from dream to dream.

They Were All Sorry.

"GEORGE FERGUSON, what does this mean?"

The voice was that of Mrs. Ferguson—shrill, piercing, and ominous.

"What does what mean?" asked George.

"This letter!"

She held it up.

"Laura, have you been——"

"No, I haven't been searching your pockets. You know I haven't. I was moving your coat from this chair, and a letter fell out. This is the letter. It is directed to you, and it's in a woman's hand. You haven't told me of any correspondence you are carrying on with——"

"Open it and read it, Laura," interrupted Mr. Ferguson. "If there was any letter in my pocket I didn't know it. Go ahead and read it. Maybe it's a millinery bill."

Scorning to reply to this, Mrs. Ferguson opened the letter and ran her eye over it.

"Oh, you didn't know this was in your pocket!" she piped. "You didn't know it! Maybe it's a millinery bill, is it? Listen! 'My dearest George'—so you're somebody else's dearest

THIS LETTER DROPPED OUT OF YOUR POCKET.

George, are you?—'My dearest George: When are you coming to see me again? I am very lonely'—she is very lonely, is she? Oh, you two-faced hypocrite!—'If you can't come, George, dearest, do write!'—she wants you to write if you can't come, does she?—'You can't think, dearest George, how I miss——'"

"What nonsense are you reading, Laura?" demanded George, beginning to be roused. "Do you mean to say——"

"I mean to say I am reading this letter you told me to read, Mr. Ferguson. I am reading this letter I found in your—that dropped out of your pocket. You don't know anything about it, don't you? 'You can't think, dearest George——'"

"Laura, are you fool enough to think that's genuine? Don't you know better than to imagine——"

"I am a fool, am I, Mr. Ferguson? Well, I'll just show you——"

"Let me see the letter."

"Let you see it? What do you want to see it for? Oh, no, Mr. Ferguson! I am going to keep it and show it to my mother!"

"Well, hold it so I can look at it. I promise you solemnly I will not attempt to take it away from you."

"I'll see that you don't. Here it is. Now look at it. Stay right where you are, George Ferguson. Don't you come a step nearer!"

"How can I see it ten feet away? Lay it down and then come and tie my hands behind me if you are afraid I'll——"

"Oh, yes! Lay it down and you'll grab it! I see through you! What's the use of pretending you never saw this before?"

"There doesn't seem to be any use in it—that's a fact. Nevertheless, I assure you, Laura, on my honor as a man——"

"On your honor! Humph!"

"Yes, on my honor—h'mph! I have never seen that letter before. I never put it in my pocket. I didn't know it was there. I am not anybody else's dearest George, and that letter is a clumsy fake got up by somebody who wants to have a little fun with me——"

"I wish I could believe it! Oh, George! George!"

(Sobs).

* * * * * * *

"Boys," said George Ferguson the next day when he went into the office where he was employed downtown, "that was a good joke some one of you played on me when you put that letter in my pocket yesterday, but it threatens to break up my family, and I ask as a favor that the chap who did it will just write a letter to my wife and tell her it was a bit of fun and that I am not to blame in the slightest degree. I don't want to know who it was. All I ask is that the thing be straightened out."

* * * * * * *

It was late in the afternoon. There came a ring at the door bell pertaining to the Ferguson dwelling, and a messenger delivered a letter addressed to Mrs. George Ferguson.

She opened it and read:

"Dear Mrs. Ferguson—In a spirit of mischief I slipped a letter in your husband's coat pocket yesterday which I fear may have fallen into your hands, and in order to atone for any misunderstanding it may possibly have caused I wish to say that I wrote it myself and that it is purely imaginary. With great respect, I subscribe myself yours truly."

This was signed "Marcellus Hankinson."

Hardly had she finished reading this when another messenger came and left another letter. It read thus:

"My Dear Mrs. Ferguson: I have a little confession to make. Yesterday, in a thoughtless moment, I wrote a letter purporting to come from some woman and dropped it into your husband's pocket. For fear you may have seen it I take occasion to assume the responsibility for the clumsy joke and to apologize for it. With great respect, yours sincerely."

The signature was "Oliver Peduncle."

Then there came another letter—also by special messenger. It was as follows:

"My Dear Madam: Pardon me for addressing you, but I wish to plead guilty to the perpetration of a foolish joke on your husband yesterday. I wrote a love letter (signed 'Dollie,' if I remember rightly) and slipped it into Mr. Ferguson's coat pocket. Fearing it may have met your eye I write this to exonerate your husband and to take upon myself the entire blame for the silly performance. Respectfully yours."

It was signed "A. Spoonamore."

The bewildered woman had hardly perused this note and laid it on the parlor table with the others, when a fourth came. It was to this effect:

"Permit me, my dear Mrs. Ferguson, to atone for an act of thoughtlessness committed yesterday. Yielding to a hasty impulse, I wrote a letter to your husband purporting to come from some feminine admirer. This I placed in one of the pockets of his coat, unknown to him. As it may possibly have fallen into your hands, I take the liberty of assuring you that I alone am to blame for the stupid joke and to express my hearty contrition."

The signature to this was "Wesley Higintop."

About two hours later Mr. Ferguson came home. He was whistling, with apparent unconsciousness of any domestic trouble, past, present, or to come.

"George," exclaimed Mrs. Ferguson, in a high-pitched voice, as she met him at the door, "where are those other letters?"—Chicago Tribune.

WRECKING A BRIDGE.

Novel Use of Electricity Successfully Tried at Clinton, Ind.

The 735-foot bridge over the Wabash at Clinton, Ind., was wrecked in August by a Hoosier, who employed the heating power of an electric current to do the work, without injury to the substructure. This exceedingly interesting feat is described in the Western Electrician.

It appears that the bridge was, up to that time, the only toll bridge in the State, and was owned by one man. It had become antiquated, and the county authorities purchased it with the idea of erecting a steel bridge in its place, using the same piers and approaches. Under the terms of the contract, the owner of the bridge was to remove the superstructure inside of thirty days, without injuring in any way the sustaining piers and masonry. This was apparently a very easy task, but, after consultation with bridge builders, house wreckers, riggers, engineers, and, in fact, every one who had a plan to suggest, the only practical plan evolved was to build a false work and take the bridge down piecemeal. To blow the bridge up with dynamite would probably injure the piers, and to burn it would likewise crack and injure the masonry. The thirty days elapsed, and no plan had been decided upon. An extension of the time for one week was granted. At this point a young electrician living in Clinton came to the fore with a scheme to literally cut the bridge down with hot electric wires, and this unique plan was finally successfully carried out with the greatest satisfaction, the operation requiring but ten hours.

The bridge, which was built in 1853, consisted of three spans, with a 70-foot draw, and, as already mentioned, was 735 feet long. Each of these spans was composed of nine chords, each consisting of three nine-inch by nine-inch yellow poplar timbers. It is perfectly evident, therefore, that if each of these timbers was cut through simultaneously—the span would drop into the river without injuring the piers. Current was secured from a near-by generating plant, and leading wires were run to the farthest span. Each of the timbers cut was next encircled with a heavy resistance wire and connections run to the main circuit. The resistance of these wires was so proportioned that the passage of an electric current of definite strength would bring them to a cherry red, just on the same principle as an incandescent lamp filament is brought to a nearly white heat. To make the cutting, or more correctly, burning, more positive, a five-pound sash weight was hung at the bottom of each loop. In exactly one hour and forty minutes after the application of the current each timber was cut through by the hot wires to a point where the weight of the structure was sufficient to break the rest, and the span they supported tumbled into the river. This operation was repeated with each span without a hitch or delay of any kind.

An examination after the fall of the bridge showed how thoroughly the current had done its work. Each timber was burned through to the same extent, namely, five inches deep on the top and three inches on the sides, the cut being comparatively clean, the wood not being charred more than an inch on each side of the point of contact with the hot wire.

A Chinese Dooley.

Two Irishmen stood at Gates avenue and Bedford street discussing a Chinese laundry sign.

"Kin ye say it, Pete?"

"Where?"

"There; don't ye say it?"

"Oh, Oi do now."

"Well, they say a Chinaman's feerst name is his last name. Do ye blave it, Pat?"

"Yis."

"Then rade it backwards."

"But rade it furruus feerst, an' it spells Lee Dew."

"But rade it backwards, man."

"D-e-w, Do; L-e-e, Le—Dooley."

"Roight ye are, Pat, an' Dooley is a foine old Irish name, but it's the feerst toime in me loife I iver heerd of a Chinese with an Oirish name. He ought to hang, the spalpeen."

Juvenile Depravity.

"Papa," said the boy, as they drove along, "that's the same horsefly that was buzzing around the horse when we started out, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Then one horsefly will follow one horse more'n a dozen miles, won't it?"

"It seems so."

"I reckon," said the boy, who had been busy thinking again, "you'd call it a one-horse fly, wouldn't you?"

"Perhaps."

"Then it was a one-horse town where we got this rig, wasn't it?"

"Don't be too fly, my son," said papa, grasping his whip and meeting the necessity firmly.—Chicago Tribune.

A Horse's Sense.

Every soldier knows that a horse will not step on a man intentionally. It is a standing order in the British cavalry that if a trooper becomes dismounted he must lie still. If he does this, the whole squadron is likely to pass over him without doing him injury.—The Rival.

A Boer Delicacy.

This is a Boer delicacy: A great square slice is cut off a loaf made of coarse, unsifted meal, and covered with a thick layer of jam—perferably strawberry. A row of sardines is then placed on top, and the oil from the sardine box is liberally poured over the whole.

ODD FLOATING BRIDGES OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Floating bridges are picturesque affairs, but one who ventures on them for the first time feels that he is risking his safety in crossing. The one shown in the illustration does not span, but lies upon the beautiful Morrell river, in Prince Edward Island. The central portion is merely a raft, attached at each end to slightly more stationary divisions. The stretch is long, and as a vehicle crosses the bridge sways and threatens to float down stream. In the flood seasons, or even at high tide, the water frequently comes up over the timbers, and as the horse splashes through the water the sense of uneasiness increases if one is not bred to such methods of getting from one side of a river to another. In winter the bridge is embedded so firmly in the ice that it is as stable as the Brooklyn bridge, but at that season it is not needed, for one may cross anywhere on the ice for six months or more.

FEUDS IN KENTUCKY.

WILD VENDETTAS OF THE MOUNTAIN REGION.

Three Desperate and Bloody Feuds Raging in One County—Hundreds of People Killed—Wars of Extermination Waged by Three Families.

Clay County, Kentucky, is probably the most famous district of its size in the United States, says a correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean. Kings County, New York, and Cook County, Illinois, are of slight interest to the general public, compared to the little moonshine borough, whose largest town has only 250 inhabitants. "Bloody Clay" holds three distinct feuds within its borders. Its simple, uncouth natives live in a state of continual warfare. Every gathering is enlivened by a shooting affray. Conditions in Clay County hark back to Scotland's border warfare, when one bugle blast assembled Highlanders and Lowlanders in deadly conflict. Very few of the bitterest partisans on either side of the feuds could tell at this time what their quarrels are about. Fighting with one faction or another is a point of honor with every male inhabitant 15 years old and owning a Colt's or a Winchester.

The three venedettas now in progress here are known as the Philpot-Griffin, Garrard-Baker-White-Howard, and the Markum-Roberts. In addition to this the fires of two other hatreds are smoldering ready to break into flame at the first crack of a rifle. These are the Sizemore-Asher and the Stapleton-Binge feuds.

Up to date twenty-two people have been killed in feud warfare in Clay County. In comparison with Kentucky's two other historic feuds—the French-Eversole and Strong-Army, in which 131 people were killed, the loss of life in the Clay County vendettas has been slight.

Philpot-Griffin Feud.

In importance the Philpot-Griffin feud now ranks first. Years ago one of the Philpot allies called one of the Griffin mountaineers "a liar." The insult flew from lip to lip. Clay County took up arms—the one party to avenge, the other to repeat the injury. Fighting rages still, and not many of the bitterest foemen now know the original starting point of their enmity. They are lined up for the Philpots and the Griffins, their kinsfolk and retainers, and will fight till the last drop of bad blood has been spilled. The Philpot-Griffin feud is well organized. Each faction has its recognized leaders. When a great battle is anticipatd they have appointed gathering places; each day every member of the faction is visited and given the latest news. Every few days all gather and formulate plans, each faction meeting at night at the homes of their leaders. Guards keep vigil; the pistols are laid in the holsters under the edge of the bed, and the Winchesters stand on the stock at the head. Each has his arsenal, in which are stored extra weapons, ammunition, etc. Both clans have a countersign for night work. If a Philpot meets a rider in the lonely hills at night he hails him with the greeting of the Philpot band. If an answer does not come promptly and accurately there is a blaze of powder and a midnight duel. The Griffins are equally alert, and all their followers are drilled in the proper Griffin countersign. On each side the clansmen are all magnificent shots, and carry the very best of weapons.

The leaders of the Philpots are George, Pleasant, Timothy, and the Hon. Granville Philpot, an ex-State Senator. They are prosperous farmers and timbermen. This faction numbers about two hundred, and nearly all live in the "Pigeon Roost district," seven miles from Manchester. The leaders of the Griffins are Sol Griffin and Dave Chadwell, and their faction is composed of a little less than two hundred of the Griffins, Chadwells, Barnetts and Hamptons. Excepting the Chadwells, all are poor farmers, but are game fighters. They also live in "Pigeon Roost," two miles from the Philpots' headquarters.

In the fall, two years ago, John Philpot and his father, Granville Philpot, met Aaron Morris and William Bundy, his father-in-law, who accused John Philpot of having named some of them as "liars." Words grew warmer until the fighting commenced, and John Philpot was shot by Morris in a hand to hand battle with revolvers. Hostilities went no further until Christmas Day, 1898. Smith Cheek, a "bad" man and nervy shot, kept a little store on House Creek, two miles from "Pigeon Roost." Green and Hugh Griffin, Aaron Morris and William Bundy were assembled at the store celebrating the day by shooting turkeys, eating cheese and crackers, and drinking moonshine whisky. Up the road came three young Philpots, "Jim Crow," Pete, and Pleasant. They rode past the store at a gallop, consulted together, and rode back.

"Smith Cheek, lemme in your store. I'm the best shot in Clay County, and I kin prove it," shouted "Jim Crow" Philpot to the Griffin gang inside.

"No, ye ain't," retorted Morris, "I live in the same county," and with this he fired on young "Jim Crow." Philpot, and the "fightin' began." Every man in the crowd joined the fracas, and when the smoke of battle cleared away

TOM BAKER AND HIS SON "JIM."

William Bundy lay dead, and Smith Cheek, the storekeeper, had "drapped part o' one ear." Not long after that Evans Chadwell was shot and killed by one of the Philpots, who fired at him from ambush.

Battle of Hooker's Branch.

On July 17, 1898, occurred the battle of Hooker's branch, a terrible affray, unequaled in the annals of Kentucky feuds. George Philpot, his two sons, Pete and Bob, and a nephew, Edward Fisher, started for Red Bird Creek to cut timber. On the way they met "Wash" Thacker, a deputy sheriff, who had a bench warrant to compel "Bob" Philpot to appear as a witness before the Grand Jury. They met in a little opening in the forest where the road crosses Hooker's branch. George Philpot began writing out a bond, the rest of the little party grouped about him. Suddenly Hugh, Harve, and Greene Griffin dashed into sight on horseback, led by Aaron Morris. As they galloped up Morris fired, striking Philpot in the back. "Pete" Philpot grabbed a rifle from the wagon and put a bullet into Morris' head, and the leader of the Griffin boys rolled under his horse, dead. While this was going on the three Griffin boys confronted Ed Fisher, getting between him and the wagon. Fisher had a stock of weapons beside him and pluckily faced the three single-handed, throwing away weapons as he emptied them and grabbing loaded ones. At last he fell back, dying, and in falling his revolver was discharged, killing Hugh Griffin. Only four men were left now, Harve and Green Griffin on one side, and George and Pete Philpot on the other. The deputy sheriff had disappeared in the woods at the first fire. The Griffin boys fought desperately, even after they were wounded and unable to aim their weapons. Both were killed finally, and of the seven who began the battle only two, George Philpot and his son, "Pete," were left. They were untouched.

Since the battle of Hooker's branch the vendetta has been waged unceasingly. A few nights afterward Sol Griffin's house was surrounded by a posse of armed men, who riddled the cabin with bullets. The family lay down flat on the floor and escaped almost miraculously. Dave Chadwell, a deputy sheriff and member of the Griffin clan, was next ambushed and shot to death. Bob Gregory, another Griffin sympathizer, was shot and killed as he rode along the highway near Manchester. At the trial, a farcical proceeding, after the battle of Hooker's branch, Deputy Sheriff Thacker testified that Morris had fired the first shot in the fight. This threw Thacker in line with the Philpots, according to Clay County ethics. Accordingly, as he and his half-brother, Jim Smith, rode home, they were murdered on the very spot where the Hooker's branch battle had taken place. Finally Governor Bradley called out troops, and two of the Griffins and two Chadwells were arrested. They will be tried for participation in the feuds within a few days at Manchester, and it is expected that they will be released. Then, according to the popular belief, "h—l will be turned loose again in Clay."

The White-Howard Feud.

The Garrard-Baker-White-Howard feud runs back several years. Two of the most powerful families in the county, the Whites and the Garrards, are involved. At the head of the one faction is Judge Beverly White, related to various lawyers, Congressmen and Governors. Gen. Theophilus T. Garrard, leader of the opposing clan, is a member of a family distinguished in this country and in England. Members of both factions in this feud, with the exception of hired retainers, are an advance upon the illiterate clansmen of the Philpot-Griffin vendetta. At present the Whites and their connections hold all the county offices and are in a position financially to carry on the quarrel to better advantage than their enemies. Two of the Bakers are now in jail at London, twenty-four miles away from Manchester, and active hostilities have ceased temporarily. Much of the fighting in this vendetta has been done by hired men, who received $1 a day and their "keep," by which is meant the supplying of ammunition, bacon and corn bread.

Of the personal courage of the leaders of the feud there can be no doubt. The Bakers are said to have Indian blood in their veins, a fact which may account for the alacrity with which they take to the methods of fighting peculiar to the red men. Susan Callihan, a half-Cherokee, is among their ancestors. Captain "Bill" Strong, who is reported to have slain twenty-five men with his own hand, was her grandson. Dr. Abner Baker, who flourished in Clay County half a century ago, killed a number of men in his time and finally was hanged for murder.

General Garrard a Factor.

Gen. T. T. Garrard, who figures in the present troubles as a friend of the Bakers, performed the same service for Dr. Baker fifty years ago. He tried to get the Governor to pardon Dr. Baker on the ground that his killings were the result of homicidal mania, and in recent years he has been giving bail for others of the Bakers when they got into the clutches of the law. The old General declares that he cannot be driven out of Clay County, where he proposes to remain the rest of his natural life with his pet cat, but his son, Gilbert Garrard, has had to move away to escape assassination.

Efforts were made to have Judge Eversole, who is related to the Whites, vacate the bench and call a special term of court, to be presided over by a special judge, to try the murder cases, but the plan fell through.

The first killing in late years was on June 6, 1898, when Wilson Howard and Burch Stores was killed, and A. B. Howard, father of Wilson, was wounded. This, it is thought, was done by Tom Baker, as there had been a dispute between them regarding a $40 note. The next day James Howard met George Baker, father of Tom, and shot him. Shortly after this Charles Wooten, son-in-law of A. B. Howard, was shot by Sid Baker. In August Tom Baker met and killed Will White, and Sheriff Beverly White, Jr. Later, in the same month, John Baker was shot by two men from behind two trees on Goose creek. His negro, who was with him, was likewise killed. July 10 of this year Tom Baker, who was to be tried in Manchester for the murder of Will White, was taken to the court house under the protection of a hundred State troops and a Gatling gun; but while standing in a guard tent in the courthouse yard a shot rang out from Sheriff White's house, directly opposite, and the noted Tom Baker, cousin of Captain William Strong, of Breathitt, fell dead. Court was adjourned, and every one who could left Clay County. The troops then took Wiley and James Baker to the jail in Barboursville. To show what intense hatred exists, John D. White a few days ago cheered, as Edward Garrard passed, for Carlo Brittan, who killed Edward's brother Daniel ten years ago.

Another Tragic Episode.

"Miss Giggins," said the young man with the obtrusive hatband, "were you ever engaged——"

"Mr. Scadson," she exclaimed, as she blushed a rosy red and sighed. "You have no right to ask such a question unless—unless—"

"I merely desired to know," he went on in a cruel monotonous tone, "if you were ever engaged in conversation with Prof. Fossil. He's a wonderfully brainy man—you ought to talk to him."—Washington Star.

God's Work.—God's work is not dependent upon human power or money, but is wrought by his spirit. Let us pray for more of his spirit, so that we, as Christians, can do more of his work.—Mr. John Wanamaker, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Founding of Christianity.—At the founding of Christianity the obstacles seemed utterly insurmountable, and they have been great in every century of its history, and they are great today.—Rev. E. A. Woods, Baptist, San Francisco, Cal.

The Advancement of Others.—Use your culture, use your education and all your powers for the help and advancement of others; for not until then will you realize life in all its fullness, its beauty and its grand possibilities.—Rev. J. S. Penman, Bangor, Me.

Simple Duties.—How hard to be great when there is no banner, no music, no applauding multitudes—but when, silent and lonely, one sees the simple duties needing to be done without a word of praise or a ray of hope.—Rev. Geo. L. Perrin, Universalist, Boston, Mass.

Luck or Chance.—If luck or chance rules, then there can be no stability, nothing fixed and certain. We must take one of the horns of this dilemma. It is impossible to hold both. Law and luck working together is a logical impossibility.—Mrs. Gestefeld, Christian Scientist, Chicago, Ill.

Christ's Kingdom.—Christ says his kingdom is not of this world. His miracles are the puzzles of civilization and the agony of agnostics; they do not know what to do with them. Christ cannot give what the world has to give. Christ rejected the world.—Rev. Dr. Gifford, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Cross.—There is a cross of the devil and there is a cross of Christ. There is a reaping of thorns and there is a reaping of flowers. There is a suffering in doing good, whose crown is eternal. There is a suffering in doing evil whose crown is everlasting despair.—Rev. S. A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

Democracy.—The cry of every one, of every class, of every section that rights shall be given all, is itself a confirmation that democracy means righteousness; that there can be no democracy without righteousness—that is, providing this cry for rights is winged with the moral consciousness of the involved responsibility.—Rev. E. G. Hirsch, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

The Disciples.—Christ wished His disciples to remain behind him in the world for their sakes and for the sake of the world; they needed the training and discipline, the experience and moral development, and the world needed the truth, the example and inspiration that these Christian men would give to it.—Rev. William A. Wasson, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Logic of Events.—There is such a thing as the logic of events, the march of history, the inevitable, and we sometimes feel helpless when confronted by this unmistakable march of events. We do what we can to protest, but are overborne. We say we will not let ourselves be submerged in the torrent, but the formation of the public sentiment goes on just the same.—Rev. Francis L. Patton, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

Getting Even with Her Enemy.

A woman was staying in a Canadian village one summer and met an old woman who had a blood feud on with another woman. "How was it Miss Smith was seen taking tea with you yesterday?" the visitor asked. "Oh, well," she said, triumphantly, "she asked me to tea the day before, so I retaliated the next day. I knew she'd make herself ill with my johnnie cake."

The industrious man is apt to score several hits while the indolent man is looking around for an easier target.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....OCTOBER 19, 1899.

From Far-off Manila.

W. R. Vann of the Kiblinger factory has a warm side (and a good fat side at that) for all the boys who wear the blue and fight under Uncle Sam's colors, whether at home or on the other side of the world. Yesterday he was gratified to receive a letter from Fred Niles, formerly with Company K, of the 157th Indiana, but now in the Nineteenth regulars under General Lawton in Manila, and has kindly allowed us to copy it for publication. The letter is as follows;

MANILA, P. I., August 30, 1899.

MY DEAR MR. VANN:—Having a few moments to spare I write to let you know that I am still on earth. We left SanFrancisco July 26, on the troop ship Newport, and arrived at Honolulu August 3. Here we stopped two days to take on coal and then left for Manila, reaching here on the 23d and landing on the 24th. We at once moved into bamboo shacks, which are about four hundred feet long and forty feet wide. These shacks are constructed entirely of bamboo, without the use of a nail.

The Nineteenth is the largest regiment now in the service and has just finished the longest trip on record, having traveled about 18,000 miles. We are under Gen. Lawton and expect to reach the firing line in a couple of days. We have had two deaths in our company—one a young man from Jackson, Mich., and the other an old regular army soldier who had been in the service about twenty-four years. I am in good health, but there are many sick in our regiment.

I must close. Hoping to hear from you and with regards to all I am

Yours truly,
FRED L. NILES.
Co. E, 19th Infantry.

Helms found Guilty.

In the circuit court at Fort Wayne yesterday the jury in the Helms case, after being out but a short time, returned a verdict of guilty. Regarding the case the Journal Gazette says:

"The trial of Jacob Helms, for criminal assault on little Mary Smith, was concluded last evening, and the defendant was found guilty as charged, the jury agreeing to the verdict in a very short time. Judge O'Rourke read the finding and turning to the prisoner, who sat directly in front of him, asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced. Helms started to rise, but hesitated and, turning to his lawyer, D. D. Moody, conversed with him for a few moments. Mr. Moody said to the court he did not beleive they could add anything to what had been said, whereupon Judge O'Rourke committed Helms to the state's prison for from one to twenty-one years. Helms never moved a muscle, but turned to Sheriff Melching, who was sitting beside him, for disposition. During the day Mrs. Mayhart and Dr. Stewart, of Garrett, were on stand, and the woman especially was submitted to a trying cross-examination, coming out of the ordeal worse for wear. Dr. Stewart told a very clear story of great damage to the prisoner. Helms took the witness stand in his own defense and denied the charges made against him, but he was not believed. The Helms case was brought here on a change of venue from DeKalb county, for there was much feeling against the man in his own neighborhood. In fact, there were threats of lynching at the time of the commission of the crime by the enraged people of Garrett and vicinity. Helms has children, but his wife is dead."

"It's a Wonder We ain't All Dead."

We eat too much, we eat too fast, we eat too often, and we take too little care of how our meals are prepared, and we would have been dead long ago but for the medical skill of Dr. Caldwell, who formulated Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Since its introduction, we find a great deal less complaint about constipation, indigestion, sick headache, sour stomach, short breath, and all the ills that come from a disordered digestive apparatus, such as some people have, but all may get rid of, by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Obtiuary.

Audrey Elizabeth DeLong daughter of Marion S. and Tillie DeLong, was born February 1st 1894, and departed this life, Oct. 12th. 1899, aged 5 years 8 months and 11 days. On Sept. 21 little Audrey was taken ill with dysentery and although loving hands did everything for her that possibly could be done yet God in his infinite wisdom, saw fit to take this rare gem from this sinful and sorrowful world to a place of joy and happiness and today little Audrey is basking in the sunshine of God's eternal love. She was a most patient sufferer and for a child of her age it was remarkable the suffering which she endured and patience with which she endured it. She was an exceptionally bright child and to see her was to love her; she was a member of class No one in the Sedan Sunday School and her little smiling face will be sadly missed by many of her classmates. She leaves to mourn her untimely departure a loving and sorrowful father and mother, one sister and two grandmothers besides a host of other relatives and friends. But we bow in humble submission to God's will, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain. The funeral services were held in the Lutheran church at Cedar on Sunday Oct. 15th. Conducted by Rev. S. H. Yager, interment in the cemetery half mile south of town.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Sedan Sunday school.

WHEREAS; It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our minst another dear little friend and classmate, Audrey DeLong, thus bereaving her home, her neighborhood and her Sabbath school; and realizing that, if there is a time in our lives when we appreciate and need a kind and sympathetic word from friends, it is when the soul is submerged by dark waves of affliction, which seem to roll mountain high, and when the heart is torn and bleeding at every pore for loved ones taken from us. Therefore be it

Resolved; That her death proves to us all another link in the invisible chain which shall draw our hearts nearer our heavenly home until we too, are permitted to enter the fold.

Resolved; That the bereaved family and relatives of the departed darling are tendered our heartfelt sympathies and we offer them our sincere condolence and pray that heaven's choicest blessings may rest upon them.

Resolved; That these resolutions be placed on the minutes of our Sunday school and that copies for publication be sent to each of the county papers.

Obituary.

God, in his wisdom, has again visited this earth through his summoning angel and has taken from among us another of his children—William H. Holman. Mr. Holman is the second of four children of Andrew E. and Harriet Holman both of whom with his only sister had preceeded him to glory land. He was born at Bedford, Bedford county, Penn., October 3 1837, and died at his home in DeKalb county, October 4, 1899, at the age of sixty-two years and one day. The earlier part of his life was spent at or near the home of his parents in Pennsylvania, working at various occupations but mostly in the capacity of a teamster. Jan 24, 1860, at McConnellsburg, Pa., he was united in marriage with Susan A. Ott and to this happy union were given the care of nine children, six sons and three daughters. The daughters passed away while they were yet in the childhood. In September, 1865, he moved with his family to Indiana where he spent the remainder of his days. He leaves a bereaved wife, six sons, two brothers, many other relatives and a host of friends to mourn his loss, and although it is true that he is no longer with us in person and we have to commit his body to the earth, still we have the satisfaction of knowing that the soul has returned to the God that gave it and that we may rejoin him in the "sweet by and by."

In The Circuit Court.

In addition to the cases already mentioned the following proceedings have been had in the circuit court:

In the case of Chas. E. Moorman vs Almeda Bevier, damages for slander, the defendent's attorneys asked for a change of venue, which was granted and the case sent to the superior court of Allen county.

One of the most important cases yet heard was that of the state of Indiana ex. rel. Ida M. Zimmerman et. al. vs Andrew E. Chapman, former trustee of Newville township, and his bondsmen, to recover on one of the fraudulent township orders issued by Chapman in payment for school supplies never received. The plaintiff was the purchaser of one or more of these orders. The court held that the bondsmen were not liable, and the plaintiff's attorneys then took an appeal to the appellate court which was granted.

Eliza M. Hayes asked to be divorced from Patrick Hayes. The defendant failed to appear and the divorce was granted at plaintiff's costs. Rachel Decker also secured release from James Decker by default. Decker has a year's contract with the state at Jeffersonville.

The case of Gottlieb Stromier vs Wm A. Zonker, on note and account, was dismissed and the costs paid.

When the case of Henry W. Coburn vs John Wyatt, et. al., on note, was called the defendants defaulted and judgment was rendered for plaintiff for $432.72 and costs.

Title was quieted in the plaintiffs in the case of Harriet D. Ober and John M. Buck vs Peter Ditmars, et. al. and the plaintiffs were given a verdict to that effect.

The divorce case of Chas. J. Pilliod vs Ella A. Pilliod has been brought here from Steuben county on change of venue. The parties to the suit are well known in Steuben.

In the divorce case of Rosa B. Knisely vs John C. Knisely, the court issued an order restraining the defendant from disposing of any of his property until the next hearing of the case, which is set for October 24.

BUTLER.

—Butler's sick people are generally improving. A number are still poorly

—John Brutchius is very low with cancer, with no hope of improvement.

—Many of our people attended the Angola fair, and speak very favorably of it.

—Stiefels have about closed out their stock of goods, and will soon quit business in Butler.

—Uncle Andrew Casebeer attended the old people's meeting last Sunday. He was the oldest man present.

—Jacob Hoffman, a former resident of Stafford, now living in the far west, is visiting his brother Alexander, and other relatives and friends.

—Lee Campbell and his gypsy wife were callers at his former home a week or so ago. They now live at Jackson, Michigan. Mr. Campbell is in poor health.

—The Old people's meeting at the M. E. church last Sunday was very largely attended. Many strange or unusual faces were seen, and many very aged people attended.

—Rev. Smith of the U. B. church has taken up his work at Pleasant Lake, and Rev. McCloe, a former Butler pastor is installed in his place. Our people were very reluctant to lose Rev. Smith from among us, but not disappointed in getting Mr. McCloe back.

—The Foley remedies we are advertising are sold by H. B. McCord.

From the Oil Belt.

Saxby McIntish and the others came home yesterday morning from their work down in Grant county, putting up poles for the Independent Telephone Co. They say it is not exactly God's country down that way, in any regard. The ground is hard, like cement, and they had to use dynamite to put down the poles. Then, too, the country is filled with piping, for they pipe oil out of that section and pipe gas into it, and in setting poles, these pipes were generally in the way. The towns built up suddenly in this oil belt, they say are pretty tough places, and it is no uncommon thing to see saloons without blinds and card playing in plain sight, everything is wide open. The land is generally poor, but farmers who have made a bare living till now, have retired to towns, built fine houses, and live at ease, on the rental of their land for oil wells. The boys say for a fact, that the streams are generally mixed with or covered by salt water and oil, and even the water they had to drink tasted of these things, so that at first, it was hard to get along. But after a few days they got used to it. They tell a harder story on the hogs and cattle, which they say, drink the salty, oily water in the streams readily and get fat on it. Having finished the work they went there to do, they are glad to find themselves in old DeKalb the garden of the state, once more.

Auburn people, many of them have seen the fine store of this company in Fort Wayne, located at 102 Calhoun street, and many have considered it but a fine store of lovely crockery, such as china and other fine ware. But it is not for the sale of these goods, for they are all given away with the sales of their fine teas, coffees, spices, etc., which are sold at reasonable prices, and checks given with each pound sold, according to value; 4 to 8 checks with a pound of tea; 1 to 2 checks with coffee, etc. With these checks, the buyer can get various articles of crockery, china, glassware, etc., etc., a large list of which each salesman carries. It is the largest house of the largest business. Its headquarters is their large store at 79 Water street, New York. Wm. Moughler of Garrett, well known to many of our people, is the agent for the sale of their goods in this county. He is authorized to say that a branch house will be established in one of the four large towns of the county, as headquarters for the business. But the location will depend upon the amount of trade he receives as well as on the prospects for business. It can be seen that an establishment of this kind would be quite a nice thing for Auburn and its people. It is not like asking the citizens to donate capital to help a new enterprize to start here. They simply ask a sufficient amount of patronage and for which a full equivalent is given for each dollar the purchaser pays. Mr. Moughler is now in our city taking orders. The goods are first-class and they give as references as to their reliability and fair dealing, their house at Fort Wayne, or anyone who has dealt with them.

Cause of the War.

We believe our readers wish to know what the British and the Boers in South Africa have gone to war about. It is a long standing trouble, with several causes, old and new and we can give them only in brief.

1. The Portugere first went around the south end in 1486 and then in 1597, in trying for a passage to India. But they made no settlement.

2. In 1652, the Holland Dutch, who began to go around Cape Good Hope, seeing no one else settled the country, settled it themselves, built a town and spread out into the country and became farmers, in their language "Boers." In the course of time they became mixed more or less with the native tribes, but have always been at war with them. Some Germans and French are also among them.

3. In 1795 the people in Europe had a fad for revolutions against governments. The South African Boers revolted also against Holland, but the English being friendly to Holland took and held the country for the latter till 1802, and then gave it back under the treaty of Amiens. European wars continued and the British in 1806 again took possession and their right to hold it, was given in 1815 by Holland. But the Dutch settlers were angry from the first and since then have made all the trouble they could, fomenting wars between the English and the natives as well as keeping up a standing quarrel themselves. Ill feeling and frequent short wars have been the rule between them and the British since.

4. The dissatisfaction of the Boers became so great that in 1833, began what they call, the "Great Trek." They moved out of Cape Colony with their families and household goods, in ox carts and nearly all went north of the Orange river and settled the present Orange Free State, extending north to the Vaal river. They have always claimed that the English were to let them remain there in peace. They did not want to be disturbed, but wanted to be farmers on a lazy plan, with plenty of land to pasture flocks and herds. But the English eventually spread into their land, and there were more quarrels. In 1843 the British occupied Natal in which were many Boers. These soon "treked" (traveled) into the Orange Free State and being joined by others, again went north, this time north of the Vaal, and founded the "Transvaal" or South African Republic. Here they again hoped to live undisturbed.

5. In 1852 the British signed a treaty with the people in both these states giving them independence in all local matters, but they must make no treaties with foreign countries without consulting the English. A large part of the Boers afterwards moved back in Orange, then again back to Transval, on account of troubles with English and with natives, for they treated the natives harshly. These troubles gave the English an excuse in 1876, to "annex" the greater part of the country. War followed, sometimes one and sometimes the other getting the best. In 1881 the British restored the two states to the Boers, under former conditions, as to treaties with outside nations.

6. Then came the discoveries of diamonds near the west border of Orange, and later of gold, near the south border of the Transvaal. Strangers, largely English, rushed in and crowded out the "Boers" or farmers, got rich, became arrogant, and demanded right of citizenship, claiming that they had built fine cities and made rich a land only before occupied by very slovenly farmers. But the Boers refused to grant any rights, but they went on taxing heavily, these outsiders, or "Uitlanders," as they call them. The sympathizing English in Cape Colony, broke over the border, in the recent Jameison raid, to help the strangers overturn the Boers, but were defeated. All this widened the breach. Now, the "Uitlanders" have asked as a final settlement, to be given citizenship in full, after a five-year residence. The Boers refuse. The English again take up the quarrel. The Boers say it is no business of England, as the strangers are of many other nations, including Americans. The English persist, saying that if the English in these two states are not allowed to become citizens, then they are still English subjects, and the home government is bound to protect them. This is the substance of the latest form of the trouble. The Boers believed war must come, and seeing England gathering her forces, took the first step and crossed the border before English troops could be got there. If the English had given up the question of the final voice or "sovereignty" she claimed in all matters in South Africa, war might have been avoided, for then the Boers would have been without their excuse. But the result of the war will probably be to fasten British sovereignty on them for good.

CORNER STONE LAID.

M'KINLEY PERFORMS IMPOSING CEREMONY AT CHICAGO.

Wields a Silver Trowel in the Exercises at the New Federal Building—Great Parade Follows—Soldiers of Three Wars in Line.

Under a bright sky, in an atmosphere of Indian summer, with flags waving and the strains of the national anthem pealing forth and viewed by throngs at windows and on roofs, the corner stone of the new Chicago Federal building was laid by the President of the United States Monday morning. President McKinley spread a trowelful of gray mortar upon the foundation stone of the great Federal structure. He received it from a shovel handed him by a hod carrier. Workmen more experienced in the art of rearing mighty buildings spread other mortar upon the base. The corner stone, white and massive in the sunlight, was lowered from a flag-entwined derrick upon the foundation stone, dropping upon and hermetically sealing the copper box containing documents and coins which may not see light for another century.

Secretary of the Treasury Gage waved his hands to the multitude. Then, as a band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and a battery on the lake front boomed the national salute 10,000 persons, standing with uncovered heads, cheered the nation's ruler and the nation's anthem.

Thousands from the windows and tops of the high buildings about—from the flag-bedecked turret of the Union League Club, the dizzy cornices of the Great Northern, the massive heights of the Monadnock building—took up the mighty refrain. These persons numbered fully 15,000. Following the example of those who had points of vantage, the tens of thousands who could not see, and had not heard a word, but held back from the proximity to the Federal building by lines of bluecoats, had patiently held their ground for hours, sent up a hoarse cheer. As the stone was falling to its bed, and inch by inch closing the sunlight from the precious box, a member of the First artillery, I. N. G., signal service, who stood in the presidential stand, wig-wagged his flag thrice. A man on a sky scraper in the vicinity wig-wagged another flag, and a third man, farther east, waved his flag. And two seconds by the stop watch after the corner stone of the new Federal building was laid the deep-toned salute of the cruiser Michigan and Battery D echoed from the lake front and mingled with the acclamations of the populace.

When silence reigned again Secretary Gage, white-haired and distinguished, stood over the huge block of Illinois limestone and said, with dignified emphasis: "I now pronounce the laying of the corner stone complete, and ask Rev. Frank Gunsaulus to ask God's blessing." And the thousands and the tens of thousands bowed their heads as Rev. Gunsaulus called upon the supreme being to hold the great structure-to-be in his keeping.

The trowel was an insignia of holiday Chicago. With the deft turn of the President's wrist and the falling of the wet mortar upon the stone was completed that little act about which all other acts, great or small, of the fall festival centered. With the laying of the corner stone at the northeast corner of the structure which is to be Chicago's magnificent postoffice—the most imposing building in all this city of giant structures—the climax of a week's festivities had been reached. Eloquence from jurists, statesmen and divines, the presence of the premiers of three great governments, and the representatives of a dozen other nations made the occasion one calculated to clinch the memory of every spectator. Without a hitch, without a blemish of any sort, the ceremonies were performed

Chicago witnessed Saturday an event without parallel in the history of the North American continent. She welcomed to her hospitality within a few hours of each other President McKinley of the United States, Vice-President and Minister of Foreign Affairs Don Ignacio Mariscal of Mexico and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada. They represent the power and authority that rules all of the people between the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and the inaccessible arctic region. Their presence in Chicago as the guests of the great city almost midway in the vast territory over which the flags of the three nations float testified to the peace golden for half a century.

LAYING OF THE POSTOFFICE CORNER STONE.

LED BY THE PRESIDENT.

Grand Civic and Military Pageant Follows Nation's Chief.

The ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of Chicago's new postoffice building were followed in the afternoon by a pageant which surpassed all similar civic and military displays in the history of the city. It was viewed by thousands who formed two compact walls of humanity miles in length. There were no threatening skies to mar or conceal the lavish decorations of the Court of Honor or to dampen the patriotic ardor of the hosts of people. Veterans of three wars received their proper measure of applause. Gray beards of the Mexican war and the aged warriors of the civil conflict heard echoes of the bugle, fife and drum which fired their heroism at Buena Vista, Gettysburg, Vicksburg and Richmond; the veterans of the strife yet fresh in memory still showed the scars of battle, while scores of semi-military and civic organizations gave additional weight to the significance of the parade. The distinguished visitors from Canada, Mexico and from this country all received and were made to realize that Chicago has a heart in proportion to its size.

President McKinley's appearance along the line of march was attended by a continuous wave of applause, while with bared head he bowed to the throngs. From the appointed place through the maze of downtown streets to the reviewing stand the President looked into a sea of faces.

Vice-President Mariscal of Mexico, surrounded by a cavalcade of horsemen in brilliant colors; Sir Wilfred Laurier, premier of Canada, escorted by another cavalry guard; distinguished generals of the American army in their sashes and regimentals, members of the President's cabinet in severe black, and scores of other distinguished guests were paid for their visit by greetings given them.

The great concourse of people which witnessed this military pageant was doubtless one of the largest gatherings in the history of the city. The color everywhere, the bright, clear sky, the soldiers passing by and the presence of high dignitaries of this and other governments all combined to make the military parade a success beyond all sanguine expectations.

Maj. Gen. Merritt, chief marshal of the parade, estimated that 1,000,000 persons saw the pageant.

A banquet given at the Auditorium to President McKinley and distinguished guests of the city was the ceremonial climax of the day.

CHICAGO'S GREAT BUILDING.

It Will Be the Most Dignified Public Structure in the West.

The nation is spending more than $4,000,000 to provide quarters in Chicago for the Federal courts and for the transaction of its mammoth business in the district. The new United States Government building which will accommodate the several Federal departments is designed in the form of a great granite cross, covering an area of 386 by 310 feet, and it will be the most dignified public structure in the West. Three of its floors—the basement and first and second stories—will cover the entire block bounded by Adams, Dearborn and Clark streets and Jackson boulevard. Upon this base the cross-like structure rises six stories higher, or 128 feet, in the air. Then comes the huge dome, a building in itself, reaching eight stories farther to a height of 295½ feet. Rising from each pavilion formed by the first three floors, and supporting each arm of the cross, are four massive monoliths, fifty feet high and five feet in diameter. The doorway will be arched, thirty-six feet high. From the immense rotunda, extending from the basement nearly to the top of the dome, will run two granite stairways and six elevator shafts. This rotunda is to be light and roomy, and will be sixty-five feet in diameter.

The building will be constructed of rough granite from the quarries of Maine

CHICAGO DAY PARADE IN THE COURT OF HONOR.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AND POSTOFFICE AT CHICAGO.

Brief Paragraphs from Chicago Banquet Toasts.

President McKinley—Has patriotism died out in the hearts of the people? Witness the 250,000 men springing to arms and in thirty days organized into regiments for the Spanish war, and 1,000,000 more ready to respond; and the more recent enlistment of 70,000 men. Has American heroism declined? The shattered and sinking fleets of the Spanish navy at Manila and Santiago, the charge of San Juan and El Caney, and the intrepid valor and determination of our gallant troops in Luzon attest the fact that the American soldier and sailor have lost none of the qualities which made our earlier army and navy illustrious and invincible.

Premier Laurier—Between your country and my country the relations have reached that degree of dignity and respect and affection that even the word "war" is never to be mentioned in a British assembly or an American assembly. Can we not hope that if ever the banners of England and the banners of the United States are again to meet on the battlefield they shall meet entwined together in the defense of some holy cause, in the defense of holy justice, for the defense of the oppressed, for the enfranchisement of the downtrodden, and for the advancement of liberty, progress and civilization.

Minister Mariscal—Less than forty years ago we had to battle against Napoleonic intervention, and in spite of our heroic resistance, prolonged for five long years, we might have succumbed, yielding to force measure, had it not been for the powerful influence of the United States, which promptly settled the matters in our favor. That historical fact has not been forgotten by any true Mexican, and we all keep it engraved in our hearts.

Secretary Long—You cheer for the men behind the guns, you give swords and banquets here and there to an admiral—and both most richly deserve the tribute—but remember that all up and down the line there are individuals whose names never got to your ears—or, if so, are already forgotten—who have earned unfading laurels. The navy is full of heroes unknown to fame.

Mayor Harrison—May I call your attention to the waterway which will soon wed the fresh waters of the great lakes with the briny waters of the Mexican gulf? On behalf of Chicago I would say to you, Mr. President, and through you to the nation, that at an enormous expense of $30,000,000, borne by itself, Chicago offers to the republic the giant share of a splendid ship canal which, whenever Congress sees it, to join in the undertaking, will land the shipping of the great lakes at every wharf of the Mississippi, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic Ocean.

Strange Obstinacy.

His Wonderful Papa.

Papa went a-fishing
With his pockets full of bait;
He went all by his lonesome,
And the luck he had was great.

He came home, bringing with him
A string of fish that weighed
Just twenty pounds, he told us,
And a lovely meal they made.

Papa went a-fishing
Upon another day,
And mamma she went with him—
He couldn't say her nay.

They came a-trudging homeward
All tired out at night,
And mamma told us papa
Had never had a bite.

My papa's broken records
Of nearly every kind—
A greater man than he is
It would be hard to find.

He's always doing wonders,
But here's what bothers me;
He never seems to do them
When folks are there to see.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

DEMOCRATIC PROSPECTS.

It grows more evident as the time passes by that the prospects of Democratic success in 1900 are particularly bright. The old isms are stronger than they were in 1896 with the people of the United States. Arbitration has gained friends, the income tax is stronger with the masses, the opposition to government by injunction grows apace, the people want bimetallism and appreciate more clearly the injustice and oppression of the single gold standard. These "reformers" of the currency who wish to have the paper money issued by the banks instead of the Government and secured only by the office furniture of these institutions have but a small following. Thus it is evident that the issues of 1896 gained largely in popular favor.

As to the new issues, the Republican party has furnished several of great importance. Concerning these issues William J. Bryan says: "On the new questions sentiment is developing rapidly. Many Republicans who did not recognize the menace of the trusts in 1896 are becoming alarmed. They now see the dangers which threaten the nation when an industrial aristocracy can arbitrarily control the price of the raw material, the rate of wages and the price of the finished product. The Republican party is impotent to destroy the trusts because the trusts are largely responsible for the success of the Republican party in the last campaign. While that party is not framing its politics along religious lines, it will not disobey the injunction, 'Remember thy Creator.' Republican hostility to the masterly inactivity displayed by the administration on the trust question will manifest itself as soon as a clear-cut issue is presented by the platform. The Republican party will thunder against the trusts with generalities when the Democratic party will point out specific remedies. On the question of imperialism the opposition within the Republican party is already manifesting itself, and will grow as the determination to fasten its imperial policy on the country becomes more apparent. There is no real attempt being made to defend the President's policy."

It will be seen by the foregoing that with the old issues more clearly understood and the new issues pressing strenuously for solution the Democratic party has the position of vantage and is entitled to feel highly encouraged as to the prospects of success in 1900.

What Must the Sacrifice Be?

If there be any certainty of securing peace in the Philippines by increasing the military forces there, then there ought to be no hesitation at Washington about making such an increase. Before it is decided the situation should be most carefully and seriously considered. Nearly 40,000 men have already been sent there. More than half of them are either dead, wounded or ill from climatic diseases. The fighting has been going on during the healthful months.

At the same time, after all this sacrifice of life and death, we actually hold less territory than we did a few weeks ago. How many men will we have to offer up altogether in order to subjugate the natives? A calculation on this question by either the War Department or President McKinley will be thankfully received, no doubt, by the people of the United States.

There are between eight and ten millions of the Filipinos, and they have shown that they are not to be despised as fighters. After having been "routed with fearful slaughter" they come up in better shape than ever, and are evidently learning the art of war to some purpose.

In the entire group of islands there are considerably over a million fighting men. How many American lives will it take to annihilate them? For that is what will have to be done with them, judging from their present temper.—New York News.

A Paralysis of General Business.

Since the organization of industrial combines matters have changed materially. The trust does not see why it should divide the profit with a jobber. In some instances the wholesaler is already ignored and the sales are made directly to the retailer and the trust gathers in all of the profit. It no longer divides with anyone and it does not intend to do so for the future. By removing competition the necessity for protecting a jobber and a wholesaler has also been removed. Under other conditions the manufacturer would not dare to ignore the jobber for fear he would turn his customers, the wholesalers, over to some other factory. To-day the jobber is left absolutely without fangs. All factories are in the trust, therefore all customers must seek the same source of supply and the jobber, however unwillingly, must accept the inevitable.—Denver Post.

Sugar Trust and Trustees.

At a difference of an eighth of a cent a pound between raw and refined sugar the protection of the trust would be high above the percentage stated by Mr. Havemeyer. Against his assertion it has been demonstrated over and over again by current facts and figures, and by the tariff act itself, that the discriminations in favor of the sugar refiners (especially against importations of German beet sugar) range as high as a cent a pound. The McKinley tariff pretended to make sugar free, while levying a duty of a half cent a pound on the refined product. This was actually and practically a duty of a half cent on the entire consumption, raw and refined, imported and domestic; and it transferred $20,000,000 from the pockets of the people to the coffers of the trust, while despoiling the treasury of its most important source of revenue.—Philadelphia Record.

When We Hauled Down the Flag.

For a century this nation has been on the side of liberty, and our sympathies have gone out to Greece, Poland, Hungary, Italy, Ireland, Mexico, the South American republics and to Cuba. We warred to free the Cubans. It was the appeal to the spirit of liberty that hurried us into the conflict with Spain. That was and is Americanism, its bent by right of birth and kinship, and its rule of conduct. We have had sympathy for struggling republicanism everywhere, and at close quarters we took down the flag in Mexico and in Japan, when we conquered the one and opened the other to modern civilization.—Springfield Republican.

The Administration on Its Travels.

In their Western tour President McKinley and the attending members of his Cabinet are scattering flowers of eloquence and begging the people not to be too hard on them, as they are doing the best they know how. A more pitiful exhibition has not been made by any national administration for many years, and it makes one ask in wonder whether these are the chief representatives of the party which, less than three years ago, felt so sure of being firmly entrenched in power for a decade at least.

McKinley is the principal distributor of the lingual bouquets. His speeches are full of heroism, patriotism, gratitude to the soldiers, thankfulness to the people and glorifications of the flag, with all of which no citizen can find fault, unless he wants to be classified among traitors and other wicked persons. The five Cabinet members who keep McKinley company follow with appeals for patient support and for discriminating censure.

Secretary Long of the Navy Department believes that he has worked hard, and that while he did not discover Dewey, he thinks that he deserves some credit for not immediately taking steps after the victory at Manila to nullify the gallant Admiral's doings. Griggs, the Attorney General, who will not bother about the enforcement of the anti-trust laws, is taken back to the days when he was an American schoolboy and when the study of geography was not so hard as it is now, when we have to go around the world for islands to conquer. The head of the military administration, Elihu Root, speaks of his humble duty to his Presidential chief, and sheds a tear as he reflects that poor McKinley is not better appreciated by his countrymen.

And so they go on. Secretary of State Hay is glad to be back in the bracing atmosphere in which he wrote "Little Breeches," but he would like the zephyrs to blow a little more gently for our noble President. Smith, the Postmaster General, reminds everybody that there is a great man in the Executive Mansion at Washington, and that there is another in the Postmaster General's office.

It is a pity that the other three members of the Cabinet were not taken along to complete this bouquet of conceit, adulation and apology.—New York News.

They Ought to Be in Line.

The Hanna managers are evidently alarmed. They have engaged the stumping services of nearly all the Republicans of any prominence in the United States for the Ohio campaign, including the members of the cabinet, United States Senators, Congressmen, Governors and Mark Hanna. It is presumed that H. H. Boyce, of Canada, who bought legislative votes for Hanna, and Captain Carter, the millionaire swindler of the government, will not be overlooked when the list of speakers is made up.—Urbana Democrat.

Not Fighting Riffraff.

In view of the testimony of credible witnesses on the ground we are forced to conclude that our soldiers are fighting something more than Filipino riffraff. We are forced to conclude that Mr. Hanna is pursuing the Otis and administration policy, for which he may be responsible himself, of deceiving the American people as to the nature of the job on hand. If the people are really in favor of finishing the job, right or wrong, they at least want to know the truth about its dimensions and character.—Chicago Chronicle.

McKinley's Short Corners.

There is no man in public life that has turned more short corners on great questions than President McKinley. In 1878 he was a radical silver man. Voted for the free coinage of silver, and for the Stanley-Matthew resolution declaring all government obligations payable in silver. As late as 1894 he denounced President Cleveland for attempting to demonetize silver. In 1898 he was a single gold standard advocate and denounced the proposition to pay in silver as repudiation.—Bellaire Tribune.

The Real Copperheads

Lentz, Garrison, Mason, Reed, Hoar and other old-time Republicans and and Democrats, are now opposing men who are giving aid and comfort to the schemers who are defying the Constitution and nullifying the Declaration of Independence. The real "copperheads" of to-day are the men who are seeking to overthrow the theory that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.—Omaha World-Herald.

Can't Fool the Solid Germans.

It is now said that of the 600 German papers in the country only six are supporting the administration on its imperialist policy. The Germans are too practical and level-headed to be carried away by mere partisanship. The administration has good reason to be worried over its lack of support in this particular quarter.—Millersburg Farmer.

A Notable Convert.

When asked about the Philippine question, Mr. Tom Reed quietly remarked: "I believe in the Declaration of Independence." It is curious how democratic a Republican becomes just as soon as he gives up office-seeking.—Atlanta Constitution.

Why? He Has Done It Before.

Desperate as is Hanna's plight in Ohio, the report that the President of the United States will take the stump in his interest seems almost beyond belief.—Albany Argus.

Ride Bullet's Force.

In the English official regulations for 1898 it is stated that the mean extreme range of the Lee-Metford bullet may be taken as about 3,500 yards, although, with a strong wind, 3,700 yards have been observed. The bullets find their way through joints of walls, unless the walls are made very fine and set in cement. About 150 rounds, concentrated on nearly the same spot, at 200 yards, will break a nine-inch brick wall. Rammed earth gives less protection than loose. When fired into sand the bullet is found to be always turned aside after it has entered a little way. —Baltimore American.

HAVE HOT BATHS FOR HORSES.

South Dakota Trainer Perfects an Equine Bathing Place.

James I. Welo of Yankton, S. D., has a Turkish bath for his horses. What is good for man must be good for the horse, was the argument uppermost in Mr. Welo's mind when he began to work out his idea for the treatment of tired race horses by the Turkish bath method. If a wearied business man can get freshened up, revivified and restored to his former buoyancy by being parboiled, rubbed, scrubbed and kneaded and then vigorously toweled and put to rest on a slab, why should not the condition of a thoroughbred be improved by the same process? The argument appealed to local racing men as sound and logical, and Welo was encouraged to concentrate his mechanical powers on an apparatus that would be suitable to perform the "Turkish" process of stimulation of tired muscles at the race track or in connection with the traveling stable.

TURKISH BATH FOR RACE HORSES.

The finished work is a complete vapor bath that is portable and will permit of trainer or attendant giving his horse a Turkish bath immediately before a race is run and send him to the starting post keyed up to the very pitch of perfection, or, as he comes off the track in a steaming sweat, he can be led off to the bath, boxed up, partially boiled and taken out to the compartment where the rubbing down process is to be carried on.

The accompanying illustration shows the exterior and interior of what may be called the "hot room" of Mr. Welo's Turkish bath for horses. The animal is led to the double doors that afford entrance to the apartment. He is allowed to put his head and neck through an aperture in the front of the bath, so that the hot air shall in no way be dangerous to his lungs; the doors are then closed on his flanks, and he stands enveloped in vapor that curls around his glossy skin and opens up a hot and wholesome pathway to horsy health.

The possibility of improving the condition of a racer by giving him a hot air bath may have occurred to the owners of thoroughbreds before, but it is so difficult of accomplishment that it has never been carried out. A horse cannot be led into a hot room and made to keep still during the sweating process. It is none too easy to get a human being, to whom the luxury of a Turkish bath is a novelty, to stay the requisite length of time in the hot room. To expect a highly strung flyer of the race track to stand still while being half boiled alive was out of the question.

The device designed by Mr. Welo for giving his horses a Turkish bath provides for all this. With the equine's head in the open air the horse is prepared to submit with a good grace to warmth at his flanks. In case of the animal, however, exhibiting wildness, a rope can be attached to rings fitted to the hot room, which will prevent the animal from trying to bolt through the aperture intended only for the head.

OWNER OF THE SHAMROCK.

Lipton Laid the Foundation for His Millions in This Country.

One of the first things that strike the American traveler in England is the sign, "Lipton, Ltd.," stuck up over perhaps a hundred places in London, and possibly 500 outside of it. In fact, about every other butcher shop in the kingdom seems to be the property of "Lipton, Ltd." Of course, every one knows who Lipton is, but it is not generally known that the Shamrock's owner is only a stockholder in a company which bears this title. Another feature about these places is the air of decidedly American enterprize about them. There are Lipton's teams; also, Lipton's cakes and Lipton's bread, to say nothing of a hundred other things that are Lipton's, also.

English society doesn't speak well of Lipton. Mention him to one of the aristocracy and his response is: "He's a good fellow, but not one of us, you know. He's like one of you American chaps." These are some of the expressions, but the common people are with him, for Lipton, Ltd., has cut prices so that many a workman's family now has a Sunday dinner such as they never enjoyed before the Anglo-American nobleman began business.

Sir Thomas is a type of the real Anglo-American. Though of Irish parentage he grew up in Scotland, gained his business experience in America and made his money in England. As a boy he raised enough money to reach New York from Glasgow, traveling in the steerage. In the metropolis he first found enough to keep him alive as a chore boy in a store on Broadway, where he remained about three years. At the end of this time he was about as well off as when he landed—possibly a dollar or so better. One day he saw a vessel loaded with cotton in the North River, and managed to work his passage back on her to Charleston, where he saw the cotton in the fields, but those were the days just after the war, when you couldn't find enough money in Carolina, except Confederate money, to average $1 to the square mile, and after a couple of years of it he returned to New York. This time he had work enough to get together about $200 and decided to go back home. There he started in business selling trinkets, candies, toys for children, and showed his ability as a tradesman, for this is Lipton's forte. Gradually he worked into the grocery and provision business, enlarging as he succeeded. For the first ten years he confined his operations to Glasgow, then he branched in Belfast, and finally worked up a trade, especially in Irish bacon and eggs, sending them to England in quantities. He made contracts with farmers in various parts of the kingdom to supply him with certain grades of hams and other specialties, for which he was noted. Then he turned his attention to the chances in Chicago for buying provisions and in a few years he had the American branch, supplying the English and other stores with a large portion of their stock. And so he has succeeded until his wealth is well up in the millions—how many is a question. He is yet in the prime of life, but 49—and not a gray hair in his head.

The Doctor's Story.

A Pennsylvania doctor who has a decided vein of humor in his make-up tells this story:

"I had an Irish woman for a patient many years. God rest her soul! she is now dead. I once pulled her through a lingering attack of typhoid, taking her temperature from time to time by having her hold a thermometer under her tongue. When she had nearly recovered I called one day and without further testing her temperature, left a simple prescription and started on my way homeward. About three miles from her house I was overtaken by her son on horseback.

"'Mother is worse,' said he; 'come right back.'

"Back I went.

"'Docther,' said the old lady, reproachfully, 'why didn't you give me the jigger undther me tongue? That did me more good than all the rest of yer d— trash!'"—New York Tribune.

How He Crossed the Bridge.

The unaffected modesty which marks the best type of courage is one of the most winning traits a man can have, be he soldier or civilian. During a recent battle in the Philippines, a Kansas regiment was brought to a halt at a wrecked bridge. The trying situation is thus described by a hero of the war, Lieut. Col. Little:

"As the colonel was across and my battalion at the head of the column, my bugler, Berry of Company F, and I were the first to reach the bridge, and, of course, the first to cross.

"I've read of men crossing bridges under fire at the head of columns, and supposed the sensation was peculiar. It was not. A man simply tries to paddle along as fast as he can, and get across. I beat Berry over, but we haven't decided yet whether I was the braver or the worse scared."

Advertised.

A new and verdant postmaster in a small rural town had received instructions to advertise all letters uncalled for at the end of a certain length of time. He obeyed orders by inserting the following advertisement in the village weekly paper at the end of the first week of his term of office:

There are ten letters in the postoffice that nobody has called for. If them they belong to don't take notice and call by the end of the month the letters will be sent to the dead letter office. Anybody expecting letters they aint got can come and see if any of these letters belong to them. All take notice.

ONLY A HINT NEEDED.

And the Woman in the Case Was Not Afraid to Give It.

The best looking girl in the Pine Mountain country was Susan Natter, and Susan was extremely, not to say foolishly, fond of Jim Davis, a young man who was my chief timberman in the season, and who owned and conducted a good farm in the river bottom as a side issue, says a storekeeper. Jim was the catch of the mountains, and like other men in that happy class he was careless and stood a fair chance of losing what ought to be his because he was too sure of it. Susan was just the girl for him, but he had almost worn out her patience by his dilly-dallying policy, and one day I thought the end had surely come, and it was all up with Jim, who was a favorite of mine as a winner of the Susan stakes.

"I want to see the best dress pattern you got in the store, colonel," she said to me as I sat in front of the commissary one day, "and bein' mighty perticklerI want you to wait on me," she added with a smirk not usual to Susan.

"Oh, indeed," I said chaffingly, going around behind the counter, "something must be going to happen."

"I reckon thar is," she admitted, frankly.

"Good for you," I laughed, "and I'm glad that Jim has got his senses at last."

"Jim?" she sniffed disdainfully. "'Tain't Jim ez fur ez I know."

"Not Jim?" I almost shouted, for Jim was my chosen for her. "Not Jim? Well, who is it?"

"Oh, that's fer me to know and you to find out, colonel," she laughed provokingly, and gave me no further satisfaction. She bought the goods and went away, and two hours later Jim came in from work and said he was going over the mountain that night with one of the Martin girls to a dance.

"By the way, Jim," I said, "did you know Susan Natter was going to get married?"

"Thunderation, colonel, no," he blurted out. "Nor she ain't, is she?"

"I guess she is. I sold her a wedding dress this afternoon and she told me she was."

"Who's she goin' ter marry, colonel?" he asked, anxiously.

"I don't know. She wouldn't tell me."

"Well, she'll tell me, colonel," he said, with the lines getting hard across his face, and little wrinkles of doubt and fear showing between. Jim was facing a possibility that had never presented itself to him in its full strength. He went out of the store and up the road leading to old man Natter's place. The next morning he stopped at the store on his way to work.

"Did you find out who it was?" I asked him at once, for I was interested more than he had been.

"'Course I did," he answered with confidence.

"Who is it?"

"Me," and he laughed the short laugh of the man who had been made to do what he knew he should have done and what he most wanted to do.

"Oh," I exclaimed, "is that it?" And later I discovered that Susan had devised a pretty little feminine scheme to bring Jim to the point, and by my unwitting, but by no means unwilling, assistance she had succeeded fully.

Prevents Aching of Joints.

I have never known a person to suffer from rheumatism who ate freely of cherries and I know of hundreds who have been relieved of attacks by eating them. I have often had cherries ordered two and three months before the season for them opened hereabouts and to supply the orders have had to send to Cuba and to California for them. The ordinary cherry contains an acid which relieves if it does not effectually cure. Of course, it may all be in the season and that rheumatism would disappear anyhow, but it is safe to say that there is no rheumatism during the cherry season. I don't know of anything healthier, though even the best-tasting, thoroughly ripe and perfect cherries start up very fine cases of colic and cholera morbus, which are very annoying. The colored people of the South think, and it may be that the same belief exists elsewhere and among others as well, that all the cramp or colic is taken out of the cherry by eating it, swallowing stone and all.

"That unquestionably was the practice once, but in recent years fears of appendicitis may have changed it somewhat, though, for the life of me, I cannot understand why it is so dangerous now to swallow apple seed, grape seed or cherry stones when in old-fashioned times it was the rule to do so rather than the exception. In Florida the orange seed is very frequently swallowed and appendicitis is unheard of there. As a spring medicine generally cherries are without doubt the most valuable of the small fruit crop, even if they do not effectually cure rheumatism. They free the blood of the uric acid which produces the condition known as rheumatism and if they do no more than that we should be, and I think are, grateful."—Washington Star.

Stair Climbing.

Persons who live in top flats and who have to climb what seems to them endless staircases to reach their homes should not take the matter to heart, for a well known physician declares that stair climbing is the very best thing for the health when performed in the proper manner.

Usually a person trends on the ball of his foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearying, as it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of the legs and feet. In walking or climbing stairs the right method is to seek for the most equal distribution possible of the body's weight.

In walking upstairs the feet should be placed squarely down on each step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each one is doing its duty in a natural manner.

Climbing stairs in this manner is an excellent form of exercise for the lower limbs, and, provided the chest is thrown well back and the climber does not get into the habit of bending half double when ascending stairs, it is excellent for the lungs and heart. The latter is excited to a more rapid action, and the lungs get full play.

The doctor is in the habit of prescribing systematic stair climbing for all his patients who are suffering from dyspepsia or lung trouble, and says that many a case of incipient consumption has been cured by the patient having to climb stairs.

A Reliable Cowcatcher.

By this whimsical incident the Chicago News reminds us that in real life, as well as in the dictionary, words have more than one meaning.

"Pardon me," said the tourist, as he gazed at the country's first locomotive, "but why is that lasso hanging under the smoke stack?"

"That," responded Amber Pete, the acting engineer, "is the cowcatcher. Thar was an iron concern that came with the engine, but the boys didn't exactly understand how it could catch a cow, so they unscrewed it, and put on one that they knew something about. It's the best cowcatcher this side of Denver, too."

STRIKE!

Hundreds of Thousands Are Involved.

Trouble in an Important Part of the Organization Affects All the Rest—A Perfectly Harmonious System Easily Thrown Out of Gear.

Organized labor has reached such a stage that anything affecting a particular branch of it draws all the rest into the difficulty.

It is exactly the same way with the different organs of the human body. Work too hard, eat too much, drink too much, exercise but little, be a little irregular in any way, and the liver quits work.

Then the bowels become constipated and the stomach goes on strike. The heart is affected, the brain follows suit, and every part of the body is dragged into the trouble.

The only way out of it is to go at the source of all this—the liver. Square yourself with the liver and all will get back to regular natural work.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic make things right with the liver. They perfume the breath, prevent food from souring on the stomach, give tone to the bowels, strengthen the intestinal muscles, while they are cleaning and stirring up the liver to renewed activity.

No matter how long a case has been incurable, Cascarets are guaranteed to put things right as they should be, and set the whole machinery a-going, and you can get them at any drug store or by mail for price—10c, 25c, or 50c. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago or New York.

A CAPABLE mother must be a healthy mother. The experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation.

Correct and practical counsel is what the expectant and would-be mother needs and this counsel she can secure without cost by writing to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass.

CAPABLE MOTHERHOOD

MRS. CORA GILSON, Yates, Manistee Co., Mich., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Two years ago I began having such dull, heavy, dragging pains in my back, menses were profuse and painful and was troubled with leucorrhœa. I took patent medicines and consulted a physician, but received no benefit and could not become pregnant.

"Seeing one of your books, I wrote to you telling you my troubles and asking for advice. You answered my letter promptly and I followed the directions faithfully, and derived so much benefit that I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough. I now find myself pregnant and have begun its use again. I cannot praise it enough."

MRS. PERLEY MOULTON, Thetford, Vt., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine. I took several bottles of it before the birth of my baby and got along nicely. I had no after-pains and am now strong and enjoying good health. Baby is also fat and healthy."

MRS. CHAS. GERBIO, 304 South Monroe St., Baltimore, Md., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was unable to become pregnant; but since I have used it my health is much improved, and I have a big baby boy, the joy and pride of our home."

The Bottle's Voyage.

A dispatch from Decatur, Ind., says: One year ago last August, John T. France and wife of this city, who were spending the summer among the northern lakes, threw a bottle containing a slip of paper with their names and addresses written on into the lake, near Petoskey, Mich. Nothing had been thought of the occurrence since until today, when Mr. France received a letter from H. Kanamaker, of Columbus, O., who had found the bottle floating in New York harbor last week, and supposed, when he picked it up, that it came in on the Olympia with Dewey.

There was more skirmishing on Wednesday, south of Manila, with the result that the Filipinos were scattered and no large bodies of the enemy are left in that direction. We are now sending both McArthur and Lawton northward to drive the enemy in that direction, and will soon send a force by water around to the north end so as to get them between two fires. The rainy season will be over soon, and by that time we will have new regiments at Manila, and it looks as if we should then make short work of it.

Heard at the Band Stand

"A Chiel's amang yo, takin' notes, An' faith he'll print it."—ROBERT BURNS.

CHAPTER XII.

The growing coolness of the days and still more unfavorable conditions of the evenings admonish the members of the Band Stand Congress, that the session must soon close.

The subjects discussed this week at the meetings we attended, looks as would be expected a less lively and less buoyant turn. The moral and business view predominated. The citizens lamented the decay of both these qualities, and several members spoke of the young men and boys, to let themselves down rather than raise themselves up. The highest ambition of many a bright lad, seems to be to learn to smoke and chew, and often to adopt habits less desirable. He enjoys life best, even if his mouth is reeking with the filthiest juice known to man. For not even the heathen chewers of the betel nut manufacture a liquid so vile. He enjoys life best also, if he is puffing jets of disgusting smoke into the faces of those with whom he associates. If he can fill full of these disagreeable odors, the room where he meets his friends or where he and his fellow workmen labor, he is happy, for is he not a man among men? It was noted also, that as a bad habit of this sort becomes fixed, as it grows stronger and stronger, ideas of politeness and a proper deference to the feelings of others, become blunted, and no regard whatever is given to the discomfort that others may and do feel, and suffer in silence.

Remarks along this line were largely jocular, but more or less earnestness cropped out.

How was it with Gladstone when a lad? Did he limit his aspirations to a nasty mouth and a stinking smoke? Did he loaf about the doors of any place he could find, where similar idlers congregate for a similar purpose? Did Lincoln put in his time rolling cheap tobacco into cheaper scraps of paper, that he might smoke away his little quantity of brains? Fancy McKinley, as a lad, standing humped up and shivering in thin clothes behind the school house, his mouth watering for a chew of what a ragged companion, was rolling like a sweet morsel under his tongue Fancy George Washington doing this. No, you cannot fancy any of these men, who by their own strength of character became eminent, doing anything of this kind. It was left for our bright, educated Auburn boys, to allow themselves to fall into this loose and unambitious state.

The Pioneer asked to change the subject, and declared that when he was a boy "We all chawed terbacker." But to close the matter up with good feeling he told this pioneer story:

"It was many years ago," said he, "and the creek ran around on this side of the flat, and close to where the Bradford House and Opera House now stand. The water was much deeper then than now, and in many places trees had been felled in such away as to lie across the stream, making an easy passage at almost any point. One fall, it happened that an attorney from a neighboring county was attending court here who had a fad of taking an early morning walk. There was an abundance of frorest trees and leaf-covered ground, that made a stroll inviting. Wandering in the frosty air, among giant elms and other forest patriarchs, he came to the banks of Cedar creek. The grounds beyond tempted him, and he looked for a crossing place. A slender tree had been felled across a year or two before, and now with the bark peeled off, it looked clean and white in the frosty morning. So, fully confident in his steady nerve, he stepped boldly onto the slippery body, and started across, balancing himself warily with arms and feet. At about the middle point, where his weight bent the pole, both feet flew into the air, his body struck the pole, then his arms grasped it, his feet also, and in his struggles to rise, he turned his body under in such a way that his excited spinal column dipped at each struggle into the chilly water. His yells startled every squirrel in the forest. Finally he let go and waded out.

A Joke on Hubby.

One of the best things concerning modern inventions we have seen lately is the following from the Huntington Herald: "It is told of a lazy man in a neighboring city that in order to save himself any inconvenience, when he had a new house built be included an automatic bath tub. The tub was so arranged that he could lie in bed and upon pushing a button, the door would open and the tub would glide in from the next room up to the side of the bed All he would have to do was to roll over into the tub and take his morning bath. One day he was showing a party of gentlemen friends over his new house and when he came to his room he said; "Let me show you my automatic bath tub." He pushed the button, the door opened, there was a scream and the tub came sailing into the room with his wife in it.

"Every Advertiser Lies."

Is the general impression among people who do not read. Fortunately there are very few people who have eyes and do not read. The more one reads, the more one knows, and the more one learns. Now, if we failed to put this advertisement where you may read it, we would be doing you an injustice, for likely as not, you are this moment suffering, and you don't know what is the matter with you. After you have read this advertisement, go and spend 10 cents for a trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It costs ten cents a line to tell you any more about this, so we will not enlarge on this subject. Try us in this. You can get it of Davenport the Druggist.

Word was received this morning by Henry Funk, that his wife's grandfather, Andrew Smith died last night at ten o'clock, and will be buried at 1 p.m. tomorrow. He had been in poor health, more or less for sometime, but just now, no fears were entertained for his sudden death. Mr. and Mrs. Funk and her mother Mrs. Smith and the other daughter, Miss Ida Smith of the COURIER office, go up to Farefield tomorrow morning to attend the funeral.

Pigmy Camels.

The western part of Persia is inhabited by a species of camel which is the pigmy of its kind. They are snow white, and are on that account almost worshiped by the people.

Hidden Beauty
In Egypt the custom is for Princesses to hide their beauty by covering the lower part of the face with a veil. In America the beauty of many of our women is hidden because of the weakness and sickness peculiar to the sex. If the Egyptian custom prevailed in this country, many sufferers would be glad to cover their premature wrinkles, their sunkencheeks, their unhealthy complexion, from the eyes of the world with the veil of the Orient.

LOST BOY

This forenoon there was a great excitement among the citizens of North VanBuren over a little lad who had wandered off and got lost.

Carl, a little three-year old son of Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Magdanz, the new pastor of the German M. E. church was the central figure. They had just moved into the Baltz property, and the father was at the barn fixing up things and the mother at the house. The lad asked to go to his father and she told him to go to the barn, but he wandered into the street instead, and it appears headed straight south at once. The mother thought nothing of his absence as she supposed he was with his father, and the father supposed he was at the house. After some time they missed him, and an excited search began. They soon found clues leading south, and finally the father, Mrs. Schomberg, Neva Hendrickson and others found him clear south of the Wabash tracks at the end of South Van Buren. He had gone about a mile. And there was rejoicing in that household.
